THE NFL'S BEST...

on videotape from NFL Films

The NFL's best teams. The outstanding players. The unforgettable games. They are all available on 1/2" VHS and Beta II videotapes from NFL Films. Highlights from the 1984 NFL Playoff teams including the story of the World Champion San Francisco 49ers' triumphant season comprise the list of new programs now available. Over 90 different other titles feature the history and humor of the NFL. Order now or request our free colorful catalog by sending in the order form below or calling toll free 800/NFL-TAPE (from NJ 609/778-1600).

BETWEEN THE LINES

The San Francisco 49ers won their second Super Bowl in four years in 1985, defeating the Miami Dolphins, 38-16, in January. Their first championship, a 26-21 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals in 1982, marked the conclusion of the National Football League's most successful campaign.

In the time between the 49ers' two titles, the NFL has experienced a steady decline in its popularity—at least in the television ratings. Contributing factors put forth as explanations include the 57-day strike by the players in 1982, which shortened the regular season to nine games; competition for audiences with college football, which now airs more games than ever before, and for talent with the United States Football League, which is experiencing its own financial and legal difficulties as it struggles to survive; revelations of drug abuse in the sport; and simply too many dull or over-long contests.

That's the bad news. The good news is that the 1984 season was characterized by an extraordinary number of record-setting performances that helped to restore some of the missing excitement. Miami quarterback Dan Marino virtually rewrote the record book, setting the standards for completions, yardage, and touchdown passes. On the receiving end of many of his tosses was Mark Clayton, who caught more scoring passes than anyone in the game's history. Two other receivers made their mark a year ago: Charlie Joiner of the San Diego Chargers and Art Monk of the Washington Redskins became the career and single-season reception leaders, respectively. If there was excitement in the air, there were also some players who kept their feet on the ground. The Chicago Bears' Walter Payton surpassed Jim Brown for the top spot on the rushing chart and the Los Angeles Rams' Eric Dickerson replaced O.J. Simpson as the single-season rushing leader. But James Wilder of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers created history on land and through the air. The NFL's busiest back, he set a record by running or receiving the ball 492 times.

The offensive players grabbed all the glamour, but it was left to the defense to decide the Super Bowl. For the second straight season a pair of cornerbacks provided the heroics in the championship game. In 1984, it was Mike Haynes and Lester Hayes of the Los Angeles Raiders who shut down the Redskin receivers; last year, it was Eric Wright and Ronnie Lott who nullified the Dolphins' explosive attack.

Football has become a year-round sport, what with the USFL opening its camps in the winter and concluding its season in mid-summer, just as the NFL is stirring. But USFL owners have voted to move to a fall schedule in 1986 and that will put the two leagues in direct competition. Just what the future holds for the new league is still uncertain, but the NFL has turned a covetous eye on Jim Kelly, Kelvin Bryant, Herschel Walker, Steve Young, Gary Anderson, and a host of other talented individuals in the USFL. The Los Angeles Rams, looking for immediate improvement, have turned to a defector from the Canadian Football League, quarterback Dieter Brock, who they hope will complement the talents of Dickerson.

Pete Rozelle celebrated his 25th anniversary as NFL commissioner by being elected to the pro football Hall of Fame. He is part of the class that also includes Roger Staubach, O.J. Simpson, Joe Namath, and Frank Gatski.

ACCORDING TO GAMES MAGAZINE . . .

We earned more
BEST GAME
awards than any other company!

For YOU, that means pride of ownership . . .
and when you play a football game by
The Avalon Hill Game Company, you know you're playing the best.

For 26 years our name has been synonymous with quality. You don't stay in business that long with garbage. However, quality means different things to different people. That's why we publish 5 different football games instead of just one . . . each a little different . . . each designed to appeal to the varied interests of millions of sports fans who live and die football.

MOST ACCURATE FOOTBALL GAME, EVER!

If you are really into statistics, Statis Pro Football is for you. This game comes with individual Player Cards for each AFL/NFL player of every team; over 1,000 cards in all. The Player Cards contain computer-generated information that will allow you to re-create an entire season by replaying games using the actual players, shuffling them in and out of lineups, making trades, calling the shots on and off the field, just like they do in real life.

IDEAL FOR SOLITAIRE PLAY

We've thought of everything. Many's the time you've wanted to play a boardgame and there's no opponent around. No problem! Statis Pro Football can be played alone using its specially designed solitaire feature.

Statis Pro Football contains NO DICE. Instead, the unique patented set of Fast Action Cards replaces the unrealistic randomness of dice. Players will perform as they did in real seasons past, only YOU, as coach, must plan your strategy to maximize players' abilities. Thousands of Statis Pro Football leagues abound throughout the USA.

"BEST FOOTBALL GAME EVERY INVENTED . . ."

That's what Sports Illustrated Magazine said about Football Strategy back in 1961. It was the first of its kind. Before 1961, no football game came close to reproducing the thrills of head-to-head strategy play where it is YOU attempting to out-guess your opponent.

It was Johnny Unitas who brought the NFL out of the doldrums of ho-hum professionalism with his unpredictable boldness. That same cerebral approach he pioneered is the basis for the play in Football Strategy, a game that has stood the test of time since 1961. Football Strategy gives you 20 basic offensive plays and 10 typical defenses, each designed to counter whatever you think your opponent's strategy will be. Football Strategy has been quoted as . . . "more than just a boardgame—it is an excellent character study."

COMPUTER FOOTBALL STRATEGY

The same elements that have made the aforementioned Football Strategy game a classic now makes it an exciting computer game. The same inter-player competitive spirit inherent in the boardgame are reproduced for play on the Commodore 64, Atari and IBM systems. As a bonus, each program allows you to play Computer Football Strategy solitaire. It's YOU against the computer—which is programmed to play "smart," reacting intelligently to play-calling patterns and overcalls. Warning: you might be in need of a psychiatrist if you can't handle losing to a computer that always seems to be one step ahead of you in football strategy.

IF YOU CAN'T BEAT 'EM, THEN JOIN 'EM

Which is what Sports Illustrated did back in the late 60's! Our Football Strategy was the inspiration for a Sports Illustrated designed game of their own called Paydirt. Paydirt is a statistically authentic game that combines the thrills of head-to-head play with the realism of real-life team performances.

We give you Team Charts of all 28 AFL/NFL teams, so they should perform just about the way they do in real life. And under normal coaching, those that reach the annual super bowl should get there, too, after you complete a typical season of games. But it is up to YOU, as coach, to see to it. Who knows, you might have been a great coach if only you had been given the chance. Paydirt now gives you that chance.

Paydirt is never out-of-date. Team Charts are updated every year by the most respected handicapper in Las Vegas (name available upon written request).

TRY BOWL BOUND—INCLUDES 30 GREAT COLLEGE TEAMS

If you can't stand professional football, then Bowl Bound is for you. It is played exactly like Paydirt, except we give you Team Charts of 30 of the greatest college football teams of all time, dating back several decades. Imagine . . . you can resolve once and for all who was the best bowl team ever. Bowl Bound has become so popular a table game that we also offer Team Set II, made up of an additional 20 #1 college teams that can be ordered separately from us by mail.

WHO IS THE BEST OF THE BEST?

That question can be answered during play of our brand new computer game, titled Super Bowl Sunday. Ready to run on the Commodore 64, this extremely sophisticated computer football game is unlike any other now on the market. We give you 20 AFL/NFL teams from the 10 most exciting super bowls ever played. Here, you can mix and match opponents to see how good these super bowl teams really were.

Super Bowl Sunday is actually 3 games in one. There is the head-to-head version in which the computer sets up the statistics, then you and your opponent battle it out from this point on. You can also play solitaire against the computer, or set the game on "autoplay" and watch the computer play against itself.

Super Bowl Sunday also happens to be the first computer game to deliver statistics and strategy together with all 22 men running through each play on the screen.

We're not saying who was the best super bowl team of all time; that's for us to know and you to find out. But find out how you can by playing Super Bowl Sunday.

● Just four years ago, at his annual state-of-the-league press conference preceding the Super Bowl, National Football League commissioner Pete Rozelle confessed that the league's biggest problem was that it had no major worries and therefore had to fight complacency.

Well, that's not a problem anymore. Rozelle could have used a flak jacket and a helmet to deal with the blows being thrown at him from all over the room at his press conference before Super Bowl XIX this past January. The NFL reeled through the 1984 season like a punch-drunk fighter, absorbing haymakers to its once unmarked image almost daily.

Television ratings fell for the third straight year, and ABC suffered a disastrous collection of mismatches and blowouts on Monday nights. There were continued drug-abuse revelations, ever-escalating salaries that produced red ink in a fraternity long used to fat profits, and competition for talent and a billion-dollar lawsuit from the United States Football League. In addition, Robert Irsay moved the proud Colt franchise from Baltimore to Indianapolis in the middle of the night, and Leonard Tose held Philadelphia hostage with a threat to transfer the Eagles to Phoenix. There were five changes in ownership in the span of a year, further sully the league's long-standing reputation for stability.

But not all was gloom and doom—far from it. Though obscured somewhat by all the negative publicity, the heart of the NFL beat strongly last season. The game's essence is its players, and 1984 produced an unprecedented collection of brilliant, record-shattering performances by individuals—and one by a team. Prestigious, long-time standards fell in several categories.

Thus, for the NFL, 1984 was the best of times and the worst of times. Drum roll, please. Presenting the honor roll of record-setters:

Second-year quarterback Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins made a mockery of the dictum that it takes years to master the game's toughest position. At the tender age of 23, Marino set season marks for completions (362), yardage (5,084), touchdown passes (48), 300-yard games (9), and 400-yard games (4). All but one record came at the expense of San Diego Charger field general Dan Fouts, who in 1981 established the standards for completions (360), yardage (4,802), 300-yard games (8), and 400-yard games (2). Y.A. Tittle, with the New York Giants in 1963, and George Blanda, with the Houston Oilers in 1961, had shared the touchdown-pass mark of 36.

Mark Clayton, a speedy, elusive 5-9 Dolphin receiver in his second pro campaign, caught a season-record 18 scoring tosses from Marino, breaking by one the mark shared by Elroy Hirsch (Los Angeles Rams, '51), Don Hutson (Green Bay Packers, '42), and Bill Groman (Houston, '61).

Walter Payton, the Chicago Bear running back known as "Sweetness," surpassed the rushing yardage (12,312) Jim Brown had gained in nine years with the Cleveland Browns. Payton's 1,684 yards a year ago gave him a total of 13,309 yards for his 10 seasons in the NFL.

Los Angeles Rams' sophomore Eric Dickerson broke O.J. Simpson's season rushing mark of 2,003 yards by amassing 2,105 yards on 379 carries.

James Wilder ran the ball 407 times for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, breaking the year-old record (390 carries) set by Dickerson.

San Diego Charger wideout Charlie Joiner, 37 and in his sixteenth season, became the game's all-time receiving leader by catching 61 passes. That raised his career total to 657 receptions, surpassing Charley Taylor's 649.

Wide receiver Art Monk of the Washington Redskins caught 106 passes to shatter the single-season standard of 101 set by Houston's Charlie Hennigan in 1964.

Finally, the Chicago Bears lived up to their nickname of "Monsters of the Midway" by recording 72 sacks, five more than the Oakland Raiders produced in 1967.

That's a remarkable set of achievements in one year. Now let's take a look at the men behind the numbers.

People ran out of superlatives to describe Marino. He ripped the Pittsburgh Steelers for 421 yards and four touchdowns in a 45-28 playoff victory that put the Dolphins in the Super Bowl. After the game, Pittsburgh coach Chuck Noll greeted his Miami counterpart, Don Shula, at midfield with a one-word accolade that neatly summed up the league consensus of Marino: "Wow!" said the usually low-key Noll.

When asked about the excellent blocking provided for Marino, Dolphin Pro Bowl guard Ed Newman replied, "That's easy with the mother lode four yards behind you." In just 30 pro games, Marino has thrown for 78 touchdowns and 8,488 yards. That's an average of 2.6 TDs and 282.6 yards per contest. The mother lode, indeed. And the Dolphins stole him. A relative offseason in Marino's senior year at the University of Pittsburgh scared off scouts, and, incredibly, five quarterbacks were selected before Miami grabbed him with the next-to-last pick in the first round of the 1983 draft. Yes, there are some red faces around the league.

Except for a lack of mobility, a flaw he negates with an uncanny ability to evade the pressure at just the last second, Marino has everything you'd look for in the ideal quarterback: the arm, the accuracy and touch, the ability to read defenses, the cool, the sense of command, and the quickest release in the league.

"His release is so low," marvels Shula. "He doesn't bring the ball up and throw with that long arm action. The ball's gone with a tremendous whip of the shoulders. He gets his whole body and legs into it. Boom!"

"Best quarterback I've ever seen, and I've never meant anything more in my life," said Terry Bradshaw of Marino. Many said the same thing about Bradshaw when he was playing for the Steelers. Whom would Bradshaw compare Marino to? "Secretariat," he answered.

Marino's favorite targets were the Mark brothers, Clayton and Duper, 5-8 book ends and burners on the flanks. Duper got all the publicity in 1983 when he emerged from obscurity to stardom in his second season. Last year, it was Clayton's turn. Together they became the first teammates to go over the 1,300-yard mark in one season, Clayton catching 73 passes for 1,389 yards and the record 18 touchdowns, and Duper grabbing 71 for 1,306 stripes and eight TDs. With two such threats, the Dolphins were murder to defend. Double one Mark, and the other killed you.

Clayton runs a 4.4 40, is steel-band tough, and has some fine moves, but his strongest suit is his outstanding leaping ability. On a dare one time at the University of Louisville, he jumped over a Ping-Pong table—lengthwise. Combine those physical skills with a flamboyant, cocky personality, a flair for showmanship, and a mouth that never quits and you've got what Shula calls "an explosion waiting to happen."

Occasionally, Clayton went boom on plays that should have been busts. "There were times when Mark was doubled and Dan threw it [the ball] up there anyway, and Mark made fantastic catches," said David Shula, Don's son and the Dolphins' receivers coach. "Those are funny because you review the film and write: 'Good route, great catch, poor choice by quarterback, touchdown.'"

Clayton, too, was a steal. The Dolphins got him in the same draft that produced Marino, in the eighth round because

This is one powerfully built machine. On demand, a 5.0 liter High Output V-8 engine delivers 210 horsepower.* No brag. Just fact.

Turnstyle: Equal parts of power and control.

Mustang GT's got what it takes to control the balance of power. Quick ratio rack and pinion steering for handling precision. Gas-filled shocks and struts on a Quadra-Shock performance suspension. Variable rate springs. Stiffer bushings and anti-sway bars for added stability in the straights, confidence in the curves. And on 15x7 alloy wheels, P225/60VR15 Goodyear Gatorback. The same tires that broke the .95-g barrier in skidpad tests.

Internal control.

When a performance car changes directions, the car should move, not the driver. That's why Mustang GT comes equipped with articulated driving seats. They adjust to fit a wide variety of bodystyles comfortably, securely. And for your information, they face an instrument panel whose analog gauges measure how much, how many, how fast.

Best-Built American Cars.

"Quality is Job 1." A 1984 survey established that Ford makes the best-built American cars. This is based on an average of problems reported by owners in the prior six months on other teams were put off by his size. That still grates on him. "I've been hearing that for too many years," he said. "You don't have to be big. All you need is a big heart." Hearts don't come any bigger than Walter Payton's. He broke Brown's mark with 154 yards on 32 carries against the New Orleans Saints at midseason. It was his 126th consecutive start, a number as impressive as his yardage total given the reckless abandon with which he hurls his 5-10, 202-pound body against men 60 or 70 pounds heavier. "It's his legs," said Washington Redskins general manager Bobby Beathard. "He's got the strongest legs I've ever seen. They're like springs. If he had played on good teams...oh, my gosh, I don't know what he would have done."

"Walter runs with a fever," said teammate Al Harris. That fever rages unabated after 10 seasons, remarkable considering the mortality rate of NFL running backs.

"I had my 11 000-mile tune-up in the offseason [arthroscopic surgery on both knees], and I feel great," Payton admitted. "The way you think is the way you are, and I think I'm 23." Payton's sights are now set on 15 000 yards, but teammate Brian Baschnagel believes his goal should be 20 000.

What he's going to do is put the career record so far out there, yours truly won't have a chance," said Dallas Cowboy running back Tony Dorsett, whose 9,525 yards in eight seasons make him one of the few runners with even a remote shot at catching Payton. "You can't overemphasize what Walter's done," marveled Dorsett. "You can't make too big a flap over it."

A huge flap is just what Payton deserves. For too many years, his accomplishments were taken for granted as the Bears labored in obscurity with a one-gun attack. Though he's not an egotist—far from it—Payton admitted the lack of recognition bothered him.

"I look at it from this standpoint," he said: "I've paid my dues to the game of football and I've had some pretty good years, but, more or less, I've been in the background. The press has a way of focusing on certain individuals who are real flashy, real outgoing, real flamboyant. I tend not to be a flashy guy. A new runner would come into the league and he would be hailed as the next great back. It makes you wonder. But what I have accomplished now overshadows anything else in my personal life and my background. Times are changing. Like they say, what goes around, comes around. I guess my turn has come around."

Eric Dickerson didn't have to wait for a turn. He burst into the NFL like a comet with 1 808 yards as a rookie and was even more brilliant in his second season. His two-year total of 3 913 yards easily topped the previous two-season high of 3 631 yards set by Houston's Earl Campbell. It earned him the ultimate compliment. "He can be the best ever," said O.J. Simpson, who not only lost his season yardage record to the rambling Ram but also his share of the mark for most 100-yard games. He and Campbell did it 11 times, Dickerson went over the century mark 12 times last season, and twice rushed for more than 200 yards.

Dickerson squeezed the juice out of the record book with a flourish, gaining 215 yards in the next-to-last game against the Oilers. Afterwards, Rams coach John Robinson shook his head and said: "It's shocking how good he is. Really shocking." Robinson employs the same philosophy Paul Brown used with Jimmy Brown. That is, if you have a big gun, fire it. Dickerson has carried the ball 769 times in two years, but he isn't complaining he's overworked. "I'm young and strong," he said. "I'm 24 and I'm able to carry it a lot. When I'm 30, I won't be as eager, so give it to me now." Robinson happily complies.

And opponents wince. "He runs at full speed from the time he gets the ball," said Curtis Greer of the St. Louis Cardinals, who yielded 208 yards to Dickerson. "Then he has another gear when he sees daylight." Simpson likens that acceleration to "Captain Kirk asking Scotty for warp speed."

Consider these numbers: Dickerson weighs 220 pounds; he ran the 100 in 9.2 in high school. "He's a freak of nature," said teammate Dennis Harrah. "God hasn't created many like him. That's why we use him so much."

When Dickerson can't run around a tackler, he'll run over him. "He's so physical," said Bruce Snyder, coach of the Rams' running backs. "In those final six inches before a tackle, he'll explode for five of those inches. Bam! When he straightens up and sticks his chest out, I know he's seen where he wants to go. That's when I say, 'Uh-oh, something good is about to happen.'"

While Dickerson was setting one record a year ago, he was losing another to James Wilder. A powerful, obviously durable 6-3 and 225 pounds, Wilder, a fourth-year pro, earned the admiration of his teammates as much for his attitude as for his ability. His enthusiasm and effort never flag, even in the doldrums of practice.

"Most guys put in on cruise control, but not James," said Buc fullback Adger Armstrong.

As for his running, another Buc back, Scott Dierking, likens Wilder to Jim Brown. "He doesn't go down unless someone gets a good shot on him," Dierking said. "He's always scrapping. God doesn't make many bodies like that. You combine that with extreme competitiveness—plus he's a nice guy—and you have a rare breed. And I've never seen a guy who can run the ball 40 times and look as fresh as the rest of us who have done nothing."

Mc Bailey

tiona. speed for a man 6-3 and 209 pounds. He can burn by a cornerback to catch a bomb on one play, then line up at tight end and block a linebacker on the next. In fact, Redskins' receivers coach Charley Taylor (yes, the same man whose career record Joiner broke) often praised Monk's blocking more than his pass catching. He was at tight end when he caught his 102nd pass of the season to break Hennigan's mark. It was one of 11 he caught for 136 yards and two touchdowns in a thrilling, season-closing 29-27 victory over the Cardinals that put the Redskins in the playoffs. And though Washington's dream of a third straight appearance in the Super Bowl died in a 23-19 playoff loss to the Bears, Monk could hardly be blamed. He caught 10 passes for 122 yards against Chicago, ending his record season on an appropriately high note.

"Art's year was the most valuable contribution to his team I've ever seen by a wide receiver," Redskins' coach Joe Gibbs said.

The Redskins would have been Super Bowl-bound again had it not been for a fierce Bears' pass rush that sacked Theismann seven times and had him running for his life throughout the game. It was brutal, but typical of the league's best defense, an exotic blend of the cerebral and the physical concocted by defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan. The whole idea is to confuse opposing offenses, and it worked so well that a Buffalo assistant coach came up to Bears' strong safety Todd Beil after a preseason game and said: "We couldn't even put together a scout team of you to practice against. We can't figure out what you guys do out there."

"What we're proving is that it's possible to think and play defense at the same time," said Bears' All-Pro middle linebacker Mike Singletary, nicknamed "Samurai" for his bloodcurdling screams when making contact.

The Bears run 80 "plays" on defense off three-man, four-man, and five-man fronts. Against the Raiders last year, they used 18 different coverages, 10 different fronts, and countless blitzes. The result: nine sacks and a 17-6 victory. It was a rare occasion when the big, bad Raiders got a taste of their own medicine.

"It's difficult for the quarterbacks to read and hard on the offensive linemen, who sometimes don't know who to block," chortled Ryan, whose defensive game plan runs 60 pages. When linemen are that confused, the quarterback is in trouble deep, especially against the studs the Bears send after him. Defensive end Richard Dent, 6-5 and 253, led the Sack Pack with 17½; tackle Dan Hampton, 6-5 and 266, had 11½; and tackle Steve McMichael, 6-2 and 260, had 10.

"Subconsciously, anybody who plays us has to have it in the back of his mind. 'These guys are monsters,'" McMichael said.

Record-setting monsters

With the bad news Bears sacking and pillaging Marino going to Clayton Deep, Payton, Dickerson, and Wilder running into the record book, and Joiner and Monk catching passes by the bushel, the NFL came through its season of discontent battered but unbowed. As long as it has players the caliber of those above, the league will remain king of team sports to the American public.

Wilder set his standard with size, speed, and muscle. Charlie Joiner, physically unimpressive at 5-11 and 185 pounds and no speed merchant anymore, earned his place in the record book with his head.

"He's the most intelligent receiver the game has ever known, the smartest, the most calculating," said San Francisco 49ers' coach Bill Walsh, an assistant with the Cincinnati Bengals when Joiner played there (1973-75). "He could come off the field and tell me what had happened on the other side. He could get on the phone and talk about coverages on the far side. I don't know how he did it, a kind of extra sense, I guess."

He's always had it. "Genius. Charlie was a genius at the passing game," said Eddie Robinson, who coached Joiner at Grambling. "He brought it with him. Willie Brown, who was with the Oakland Raiders at the time, used to come back to Grambling to work with our defensive backs. But he'd also keep Charlie out after practice and work on covering him one-on-one. One day, Willie told me, 'Coach, I'm getting as much out of this as the kids. If I can cover Charlie, I can cover anybody in the NFL.'"

Joiner has become the Chargers' prime possession receiver, the guy they like to go to on third down. When the strike-shortened 1982 season resumed, each of Joiner's first 17 receptions produced a first down. Dan Fouts calls him "my security blanket."

Joe Theismann feels the same way about Art Monk. In a season in which the Redskin receiving corps was decimated by injuries, Monk was "always there to count on," said Theismann, the Skins' quarterback.

There was little reason to suspect that Monk would blossom into a record setter. A running back at Syracuse, he was converted to wide receiver. Though a solid performer, his four-year numbers gave no hint of the glory to come in 1984. In '83, for example, he caught 47 passes. Monk has excep-

Mention the word cornerbacks to the average sports fan and he is likely to hear "quarterbacks." Such as: "Good cornerbacks can take you to the Super Bowl."

"Yes, every team needs a Dan Marino or Joe Montana."

"No, I said cornerbacks."

Cornerbacks do more than fill in around the edges. They always have been on the spot, usually chasing someone back into the corner of an end zone, but now their place is center stage. Despite rules that have threatened to make them mere props, they are demanding equal billing with wide receivers. They are grabbing attention as they grab for the ball that is so often in the air.

Good cornerbacks can win Super Bowls. Montana should have sliced off generous pieces of his Most Valuable Player award in Super Bowl XIX for San Francisco cornerbacks Eric Wright and Ronnie Lott. You can be sure that Marino couldn't forget them after they limited Miami's All-Pro receivers Mark Clayton and Mark Duper to seven catches and no touchdowns.

"Throughout the whole week, we knew that would be the key. [The game] would be determined on what kind of day we had," said Wright.

"Eric had a great day," said Lott.

"He has lived in my shadow for the past two years, so he's finally going to get his due."

Wright actually began to collect his laurels four days before the game when he replaced the injured New York Giants' cornerback Mark Haynes on the Pro Bowl roster. Thus he joined all three of his San Francisco teammates in the all-star defensive backfield: Lott, strong safety Carlton Williamson, and free safety Dwight Hicks. Wright's reputation preceded the announcement. He was having the best year of anyone in the 49er secondary and probably any cornerback in football, so his late addition to the Pro Bowl roster only saved the league embarrassment.

In the Super Bowl, Wright snuffed Marino's last gasp at respectability with a leaping interception against Clayton at the goal line. At the time, the score was already the final 38-16, but with five minutes left in the third quarter and the awesome Miami passing attack on the field, Wright's play represented an ending point if not a turning point. With Clayton a step ahead of Wright and Marino's pass apparently on the money, Wright would have been praised for knocking down the ball. When he intercepted it, he lowered the curtain and raised consciousness. These guys aren't hoops for an aerial circus to be used and abused, set on fire and burned by wealthy, acrobatic receivers; they are athletes of consummate skill and grace who can make great catches without knowing the plays ahead of time. They are more than reactors who are part of the act, they can make a difference in your team.

The year before Los Angeles Raiders cornerbacks Mike Haynes and Lester Hayes held the Washington Redskins receivers Charlie Brown, Akin Garrett and Art Monk to just five catches in the Raiders' 38-9 romp in Super Bowl XVII.

The evidence goes far beyond two games or even two Super Bowls. In Super Bowl XVII, Washington cornerbacks Vernon Dean and Jerry White helped hold Miami receivers Jimmy Cefalo and Durrell Harris to only four catches from quarterback David Woodley. White overrated his value in that confrontation and held out for more money than the Redskins cared to pay, but even the lowly financial status of the defensive back is changing. Though they have ranked ahead of only kickers on the National Football League salary scale, the defensive backs have seen their average pay jump from $68,700 to $137,000 in the 1980s. Now they are only $10,000 behind the wide receivers and gaining ground despite playing rules that have discouraged pass defenders from even touching the glamorous pass catchers.

The worth of the cornerbacks was demonstrated in 1981 when the 49ers made Lott their No. 1 draft choice and Wright their No. 2. Along with No. 3 choice Williamson at strong safety, the 49ers started three rookies in their backfield and turned around a pass defense that ranked 27th in the league in 1980 to win Super Bowl XVI the following season. Two years later, the Raiders presented even more dramatic testimony to the growing importance of the cornerback. Already armed with one of the best in the business in Hayes, they pillaged the whole league by raiding Haynes from the New England Patriots to form a pair that helped win a Super Bowl. The Patriots didn't want to pay Haynes a whole lot more than the $210,000 he had made in 1982, even though he was recognized as one of the best defensive players in football and even though the Patriots themselves recognized the importance of good defensive backs by drafting five of them in the first round between 1976 and 1980.

"I just wanted to be paid what the better defensive players in the league were getting," said Haynes.

Frank Minnifield

The Raiders made a deal for Haynes and paid him $1.2 million for three years. Like the 49ers before them, they immediately jumped from 27th in pass defense to a Super Bowl victory. It was Raiders' boss Al Davis who engineered the coup, proving he can beat his colleagues out of court as well as in. They all should have known. In 1967, Davis stole cornerback Willie Brown from the Denver Broncos in a trade, and Brown displayed his old American Football League "bump-and-run" technique so convincingly to the NFL that he ended up in the Hall of Fame. It was also Davis who made Lester Hayes a fifth-round draft choice from Texas A&M where he played linebacker and was projected as a strong safety by everyone except Davis, who noticed "his explosion" and converted him to the corner.

In his book, former Raiders coach John Madden relates only one serious conflict he had with Davis throughout their years together. "Al always thought that you built a team with cornerbacks and I always thought you built a team with offensive linemen," Madden wrote. "'Cornerbacks,' he would say, 'You start with cornerbacks.' 'No, no,' I would say, 'You start with offensive linemen.' We argued that for ten years, but it never developed into a serious difference of opinion for a very simple reason. I agreed that cornerbacks were the second-most important position in building a team and Al agreed that offensive linemen were second."

Cornerbacks were practically ruled illegal in 1978 when the club owners decided the game needed more scoring to become more exciting. They put the Willie Browns and the bump-and-run out of business by limiting the defender's contact with a receiver to one hit within five yards of the line of scrimmage.

"You used to be able to run 'ax' techniques and things like that on fast receivers to slow them down to your caliber of play," said Bears' defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan. "A little guy used to be scared to come across the middle. Now if he gets by five yards, he's a brave guy."

Speed became more dangerous than skill and harder to stop. But instead of rendering the cornerback obsolete, the rule change rendered the species an absolute necessity. Football is a game of action and reaction. Defenses constantly catch up with offenses which constantly catch up with defenses. Because the rules made it harder to play cornerback, the result was better cornerbacks. Like insecticide encouraging a stronger strain of insect.

According to Dallas coach Tom Landry, the bump-and-run technique was invented out of necessity, not convenience. "The AFL cornerbacks used the bump-and-run because of a lack of ability," said Landry. "It was an attempt to cover up their weaknesses."

Cornerbacks unable to run with receivers often included forearms in their repertoire. Rules allowed contact until the ball left the quarterback's hand, so cornerbacks would push and shove receivers all the way down the field. Ryan, who coached under Weeb Ewbank with the Jets, remembers the first Monday night football telecast between the Cleveland Browns and Jets in 1970.

"We had two rookies playing cornerback, Earle Thomas and Steve Tannen, and we played bump-and-run. The officials didn't know how to call it because they hadn't seen it in the NFL. So we got penalized 160 yards and got beat 31-21," said Ryan.

Without the crutch of the bump, today's cornerbacks have had to hone two things: speed and a gambling instinct. The first cannot be taught or bought.

"Speed is so important, because they've taken away most of the tools you had in the past," said Washington defensive coordinator Richie Petitbon. "Consequently, you've had to fall back on sheer athletic ability. You almost have to have guys who can run 4.5 in order to play that position."

THEY'VE CORNERED THE MARKET IN PASS DEFENSE

Every team would like to have at least three of them to cover the offensive sets which sometimes feature three or four wide receivers. But even if you have only one blue corner, that is one who is a great man to man coverer. It increases everything you can do on defense," said pro talent evaluator Mike Giddings.

"It's nice to have just one that you can tell, 'O.K. See you after the game,'" said New York Giants' coach Bill Parcells.

When the Giants' best, Mark Haynes, was injured and forced out of action late in a game against the St. Louis Cardinals last season, momentum shifted immediately. With the score tied at 14, the Cardinals faced fourth down and 5. Neil Lomax threw a 35-yard touchdown pass to Roy Green, who had been contained by Haynes, and the Cardinals went on to win, 31-21.

"When you have one great one, you don't ever throw to that side," said Cleveland coach Marty Shottenheimer. "The other corner, who may be average, is reduced to less than average because they throw at him all the time." That happened to the Raiders' Hayes last year when teams stayed away from Haynes.

For the Browns, a good defense became better the day Frank Minnifield stepped in at cornerback opposite Hanford Dixon. "I remember when they put in the rule limiting contact in 1978," said Shottenheimer. "Chuck No I thought it would create more man-to-man and tight coverage, more bump-and-run. He was right. With the acquisition of Frank Minnifield, who brought the bump-and-run with him, that helped us significantly."

When Shottenheimer speaks of the bump-and-run today, it's with emphasis on the run, because the bump is limited to one in the first five yards. "After that, it's like a dog chasing a rabbit," said Bears' personnel director Bill Tobin. "Every time he turns, you turn." That particular breed of dog is hard for scouts like Tobin to find. "Defensive backs can't keep up with what is being asked of them," said Tobin. "It's tough to shut a guy out for 40 or 50 minutes. You might win 90 percent of the time, but the other 10 percent, you give up 21 points."

That's why more cornerbacks become gamblers, like Lott or Dallas's Everson Walls, who want to score as many times as they are scored against. "Walls says, 'You got one now I'm going to get one,'" said Dallas personnel director Gil Brandt. "Everybody picks on him, but it doesn't bother him."

"You have to have a short memory to play the corner," said Shottenheimer.

In Super Bowl XIX, Wright might have been ecstatic merely to keep Clayton out of the end zone. Instead, he demonstrated the mentality of the true "blue" corner. "I was in bump-and-run and I got a good piece of him at the line," Wright said. "It knocked him off his pattern. I turned my head just as the ball came. Normally, I'd try to knock it down. But I wasn't going to let him be more aggressive than me."

The increased significance of having good corners is reflected in the draft. In the first five drafts of the 1980s, 19 teams selected defensive backs in the first round. In the five drafts before that, only 10 teams thought it was necessary to select a defensive back in the first round. Last year, the Los Angeles Rams made an effort to keep up with the Raiders in their neighborhood and traded their first-round pick to the Kansas City Chiefs for cornerback Gary Green.

"He was the best, by far, first-round choice in the draft this year," said coach John Robinson. "I'd give up my first-round pick every year for players like Gary Green. He's better than a first-rounder because he's not only talented, he's experienced. He's an All-Pro."

Green wasted no time demonstrating the confidence that is as vital to his position as speed. "I think I'm the best all-around cornerback in the league," he said. "Being a good cornerback is not just covering wide receivers and knocking down passes and getting interceptions. It's also tackling and forcing the run."

"I think our skill position ranks right up there with the quarterback position," said Lott.

"Unquestionably, the toughest position," added Mike Haynes.

The United States Football League helped emphasize the value of the cornerback last year when the Memphis Showboats outbid the San Diego Chargers and the Indianapolis Colts for the top two cornerbacks selected in the NFL draft: Mossy Cade and Leonard Coleman. Cade was the sixth pick, Coleman the eighth. Both were offered NFL contracts of approximately $1.7 million for four years. The USFL paid each in the vicinity of $2 million.

Buddy Ryan thinks the price is worth it. Despite coordinating a fierce Bears' defense that led the league last year with spectacular statistics, Ryan has begged his personnel people for more and better cornerbacks. The Bears set a record for sacking quarterbacks, and nearly all their pressure came off blitzes. The assumption is that the Bears' cornerbacks were good enough to cover man-to-man while the blitzers gambled, but Ryan says that is not true.

"We play a lot of man, but never straight man. We're always helping our corners. We put a lot of pressure on our linebackers," said Ryan. "When we blitz, we feel we're going to get pressure or we're going to get beat because we're not that good on the corner."

Ryan wants his cornerbacks to bump receivers in the five-yard zone. "We hit them as well as anybody in the league and we still don't do a good job of it," said Ryan. "If it was easy, everybody would be doing it. Guys would be coming off the street doing it. Nothing's easy in this league."

Cornerbacks would argue that nothing's fair either, but a new rule change for this season might finally give the defense a well-deserved break. The stiff pass-interference rule has been liberalized to give the defender a better shot at the ball. Depending on how officials interpret the rule, cornerbacks and their sidekicks could be encouraged to get more aggressive. The new rule states that if a receiver and a defender are both looking for the ball, an official cannot penalize the defender for contact "no matter how severe." The rule is designed to eliminate "cheap" 50- and 60-yard penalties called for incidental contact or tripping.

"I think it's great," said Pettibone. "It will bring back some semblance of defense. The way it is now, they let you get away with more in the NBA than they do in the NFL. Hopefully, they'll let the guys play now."

The cornerbacks are ready, willing, and able.

STRAT-O-MATIC PRO FOOTBALL ... FANTASTIC BEFORE...

BEYOND COMPARE NOW!

It is rare that a fantastic product is greatly improved upon, but that's what we did to Strat-O-Matic Pro Football in 1983. Our football game's advanced and super advanced versions were wondrously revised to place our great product beyond compare. And this was done without making the game more difficult to play. Most important was the overwhelmingly gratifying response we received from our customers concerning these changes.

Strat-O-Matic is actually 3 games in one—basic, advanced and super advanced.

Our basic game allows you to coach all 28 NFL teams with each team's performance dictated by its player personnel and your coaching decisions. Each player's strengths and weaknesses are measured. For example, the Bengals' Ken Anderson has an excellent pass completion percentage but experiences more difficulty completing long passes than many other quarterbacks. Washington's John Riggins may not be an outside running threat, but few runners match his ability to pick up the "tough inside yardage." Several receivers are superior to Dwight Clark of San Francisco "in going deep for the bomb," but few equal his ability in catching medium and short passes.

Our advanced and super advanced games allow you even more player and strategical control over 1000 NFL players. 4-3, 3-4, nickel defense, or whatever, if that's your bag, our advanced or super advanced game is for you. Yes, you can actually set-up these and countless other defenses to battle pro football's varied offense formations including full house backfield, 3 wide receiver or 2 tight end alignments. Imagine the "crunching" pass rush of the Jets' Mark Gastineau — Yes, you actually feel that sensation in our super advanced game.

Our basic game is simple and easy to play. Our advanced and super advanced games are more complex and unbelievably exciting to play. And best of all, there is no need to purchase each game separately, as all game parts and instructions for all 3 games are included in our famous football product. If you are football fanatical or just football interested, youngster or adult, Strat-O-Matic is for you.

There is still a lot of little boy in him, even though the public image reveals none of it. To Pete Rozelle, he is the kid who reads box scores more than he is the corporate executive studying the bottom line of a balance sheet. He is an enthusiastic fan more than he is a man who shapes the history of sport. He is the same person who was as thrilled to make 60 cents an hour in his first job with the National Football League as he is to be one of the highest paid business executives in the nation as its commissioner.

Alvin Pete Rozelle goes into the pro football Hall of Fame as part of the class of 1985 even though he has never blocked or tackled anyone in his life. But he doesn't have to take a back seat to any of the legendary figures of the game who will surround him in the Hall.

"Pete Rozelle has done more for pro football than any man in history, including George Halas," says Art Rooney, the 85-year-old owner of the Pittsburgh Steelers who goes back to the roots of the game. "George was a great friend of mine, and I had the utmost respect for him, but Pete Rozelle is not only the greatest commissioner in football, he is the best any sport has ever had."

Virtually every day starts the same for Rozelle in Westchester, a county 40 minutes from downtown Manhattan and his Park Avenue office. He slides into his leased car (paid for by the league as part of his contract) and is driven to work. Beside him on the seat are the daily newspapers, both local to New York City and national. He reads them on the way to the office.

"I guess it goes back to when I was a little kid," says Rozelle, who is now 59 and celebrating his 25th year as commissioner of the NFL. "I loved to read the sports pages—a lot of sports. I wasn't big enough to play football [in the Compton, California area]. The best I ever did was play tag football on the playground. I played some basketball in high school, but I loved all sports."

When he was about 12 years old (he remembers it was sometime while in junior high school), his parents purchased a portable typewriter as a present. Rozelle used it to cover sports for the school paper.

"I covered the first high school game Duke Snider ever played in. He was a pitcher in those days," explains Rozelle, who remembers with great fondness his school days in the Compton area. "He pitched a no-hitter that day."

"My dad and uncles would take me fishing with them and they would talk sports. From time to time, they would take me to see the old Los Angeles Angels play. They were big sports fans. My dad and myself would sit down and figure out the [horse] races from the morning paper [they were re-created at night on the radio], and make a pick. I was pretty good at it. When someone would come over to the house, my dad would start bragging about how his little tyke picked the winner of the big race that day."

At Compton junior college, Rozelle combined his interests in sports and writing to get a job in the public relations department. It was also at that time that the Rams used the school for summer training camp, where Rozelle got his first NFL job. "It was just 60 cents an hour, and I made good money for those days because I could work a lot of hours. I still have pictures at home with me sitting on a pile of Ram helmets with guys like [Bob] Waterfield and Crazy Legs [Hirsch]. Those are memories I really cherish."

May 9, 1985, Harvard University. The speaker, David F. Dixon, founder of the United States Football League. "Mr. Pete Rozelle is a brilliant marketing executive. He is keenly aware that public interest in the NFL as a whole has been the most important element in shaping the league's success and is determined to maintain that interest at all costs."

Rozelle has been a hustler all of his life. And like any good hustler, he has mastered the basics of promoting and selling

The seeds were planted early when he was in his late teens growing out of a relationship he formed with Maxwell Styles, public relations director of the Rams, who befriended Rozelle at the Compton training camp.

My last two years at Compton, I put out the program for the Rams," said Rozelle, who started picking up the basics of advertising, promoting, marketing, and selling then. "It was great experience for me. How many kids that age would ever get a chance to do something like that?"

Rozelle, until recent years, when he has spent hundreds of hours testifying in courtrooms and before Congress, always had great timing. It was as if some touch of magic put him in the right place at the right time and pushed him toward a certain destiny.

"Compton had the big relays in those days, with all of the colleges in the west coming. I got to know Pete Newell when he came down for the relays, and eventually I wound up with him at USF [University of San Francisco] for my last two years of college. Again I was lucky. The basketball team [Newell's] went to the NIT and the football team was undefeated."

When Rozelle graduated, Dan Reeves, the owner of the Rams, offered him a job to come home. "He offered me $5,500. I wanted $6,500. He said I was $5,500 and not a cent more. I grabbed it in a hurry." A few years later, however, Ken Macker, a friend who owned one of the largest public-relations firms in San Francisco, made him an offer he couldn't refuse. "He offered me $12,000 a year to leave the Rams. When I left, Dan wrote me a note saying, 'Remember, Pete, money isn't everything.'"

While Rozelle was in San Francisco expanding his education as a promoter and hustler, the Rams were developing trouble back in Los Angeles. General manager Tex Schramm left to take a job with CBS-TV. Four partners owned the Rams and were fighting for control. Reeves held on, and with the aid of a timely (there's that word again) call from commissioner Bert Bell, called Rozelle back to be general manager at L.A. "Bell called me up and asked me to consider it. There wasn't much to consider. I was going back home and doubling my salary again [to $25,000]."

"If I had to make the odds on my chances of becoming commissioner, I would have made them 100 to 1. You can't make them any higher than that," said Rozelle recently, looking back on his startling ascension to the NFL throne at the age of 33 in 1960. "You could hardly say that I was a big favorite. It took 10 days and 23 ballots for the owners to make a selection. When I learned [at the meeting] that I had a chance, I went to the men's room and started smoking. Every time someone came in, I pretended to be washing my hands. Finally, when they found me and told me I had been selected, I walked back into the room and told them, 'Gentlemen, I can assure you that I take this job with clean hands.'"

Rozelle moved swiftly with those clean hands. He made a move in 1961 that he still considers the most important of his tenure as commissioner, and one that proved to be the cornerstone of the NFL's great success during his stay in office. That year, he went to Congress and asked for an antitrust exemption that would allow the teams to share equally throughout the league the TV revenues he was working on with CBS for a network contract.

"What people tend to forget is the sacrifice that owners like Wellington Mara [New York Giants], Dan Reeves [Rams], and others from the big cities made to allow teams like Green Bay to get the same money out of the TV contract. It is the thing that helped create the competitive and geographic balance in the league. If they didn't agree to make the sacrifice, what has happened to the league would never have come about."

PETE ROZELLE

25 YEARS AS NFL COMMISSIONER

Congress granted the exemption in return for a pledge from the NFL that it would not play games on Friday nights or Saturdays in the fall, while the schoolboys and colleges were still playing. This, it was felt, would prevent the NFL TV package from hurting college and high school football. Rozelle was glad to go along with it, because he has been outspoken about preserving college football as it is. He has refused to allow underclassmen to play in the NFL, with Herschel Walker being a prime example.

The NFL on TV started as a brush fire in the early 1960s, grew to a forest fire after the merger with the rival AFL, and exploded into a raging inferno in the 1970s as the Super Bowl became the single greatest sports event in the nation each year and Monday Night football a habit that changed the habits of many people.

"The merger brought NFL style of football to a greater portion of the country," said Rozelle, who began watching his league play on two networks (CBS and NBC) and eventually three (ABC), with Monday nights, starting in 1981. "It has been really something to watch the way the Super Bowl has grown. A great moment was when the Steelers won their first Super Bowl in 1975. There was a lot of emotion in that dressing room and for me when I handed the trophy to Mr. Rooney. Little did I know the Steelers would win three more Super Bowls in the next five years.

As the National Football League expanded to 28 teams covering nearly every area of the nation and to the three major networks, Rozelle put all of his promotional and marketing skills to work. The NFL became the first league to develop its own film company, NFL Films, which has won countless major awards for excellence while packaging syndicated shows to numerous TV stations across the country. If the fan didn't see it live on Sunday or Monday, he could catch up with it during the week on one of his local channels. Other leagues followed cue and developed their own film companies. It was the same with NFL Properties, the marketing and licensing arm of the league, selling everything from ashtrays to slick magazines and generating millions of dollars for the owners, most of whom have developed their own sports shops within their stadiums. A great deal of the money coming from Properties goes into NFL Charities, another facet of the Rozelle era and is distributed across the nation to worthy causes, such as the United Way, which has reaped the benefit of the support given on each broadcast by the league through the award-winning promotional spots.

"If his [Rozelle's] people were working for Nixon, he would still be in the White House," Los Angeles Raiders' owner Al Davis, archenemy of Rozelle, once offered as a back-handed compliment. "Rozelle is one of the great public-relations people of all time," says Davis.

When Rozelle started as commissioner, the NFL was getting $2 million a year as a league from network TV. In 1962 he negotiated his first TV contract, and the price jumped to $4.6 million per year. Three years ago, with Pete still negotiating, it broke the bank at $400 million per year. In 1960, American Football League franchises sold for $25,000. San Diego, which was part of the AFL and entered the NFL via the merger, recently was sold by Gene Klein to Alex Spanos for $82 million.

The numbers spawned during the Rozelle regime are staggering. Last year, a one-minute commercial for the Super Bowl in San Francisco cost $1 million dollars. A pair of game tickets, each with a face value of $60, was being scalped for $1,250 during the week. The games themselves and the Super Bowl account for the ten most-watched sporting events on TV all-time. This past year, three major polls found NFL football the No. 1 game in the nation, drawing a higher percentage of the votes than all of the other sports put together.

"I have been very lucky," says Rozelle. "The owners have been very kind to me. Sooner or later you have to get involved in some problem with almost every team. The owner can be hot and angry. I try to stay cool and use logic with him. I try to convince [the owners] that the most important thing is to stay together. If we stay together, we will grow."

He has not been as successful at this in recent years as he once was. Davis, who felt Rozelle tried to undermine him in Oakland, triggering the Raiders' move to Los Angeles and the resulting court cases, went his own way, opening a Pandora's box. Robert Irsay moved Baltimore to Indianapolis against Rozelle's wishes. Leonard Rose tried to do the same with the Eagles, but Rozelle acted swiftly to orchestrate a move to keep the team away from Phoenix and in Philadelphia. Another painful episode came this past spring, when he had to support the sale of the Saints to keep that team in New Orleans despite the fact that the new owners did not have the financial portfolio owners of a $65 million business should have.

"There are a lot of times I get discouraged," says Rozelle. "I don't have the fun I used to have at this job, but I never think of quitting. I love what I am doing. Every day there is a challenge, and I'm competitive."

by DON PIERSON CHICAGO TRIBUNE

case anyone thinks a cutback from 49 to 45 on the roster will make any difference, please consult the nine defensive linemen the 49ers played last season.

Is the NFC facing a dynasty? Maybe not, but the 49ers aren't acting like the polite hosts, either. Whatever happened to parity anyway? Aren't these teams supposed to pass things around? Good for business, isn't it? Yet the 49ers compiled a record of 15-1, which hardly keeps the customers interested in December.

Then take the draft. The 49ers did. The draft was invented to help the poor get richer. Presumably, the rich get poorer in the bargain because not everyone can draft the best players. When you win the Super Bowl, you go to the end of the line and patiently wait your turn, taking whatever crumbs the rest of the league leaves on the draft table. Not the 49ers. They acted like gluttons and bribed the New England Patriots to let them cut in ahead of 12 teams. Then they took one of the best players in a draft that wasn't supposed to have many great ones. And he's a wide receiver to boot. Jerry Rice of Mississippi Valley. Most teams think the 49ers need wide receivers like the arms race needs one more weapon. Much more of this and the 49ers are going to blow up the whole league.

So who can beat the 49ers in a conference that now has won three of the last four Super Bowls? A new champion probably won't emerge from the 49ers' own West Division, because the 49ers own it. The Los Angeles Rams are the only team close. The Atlanta Falcons and New Orleans Saints appear to have retreated from the heat of battle to reload, which makes it even tougher on all the teams trying to catch the 49ers. When a team such as the 49ers can have the advantage of four games a year against the likes of the Falcons and Saints it can rest up for bigger and better things, like the Rams, poor Rams. The East and Central divisions are so busy beating each other up that they save no energy for the 49ers. NFC foes took some curious turns during the offseason in their chase of the 49ers.

THE WEST: The Rams' answer this year to 49er quarterback Joe Montana is Dieter Brock, a 34-year-old refugee from the Canadian Football League who threw for 35,000 yards north of the border and is looking for his first yard south of it. The big question is whether Brock can hand off. With Eric Dickerson running, that's about all the Ram quarterback has to do. The Rams passed fewer times than any other team last year and would like to improve in that area. Defensively, their best lineman, Jack Youngblood, has a bad back.

The Falcons are in the process of drafting offensive and defensive linemen, and you know what that means: rebuilding at its most basic level. They hope they can get another season out of 32-year-old quarterback Steve Bartkowski.

The Saints began their 1985 journey by trading their top running back, George Rogers, to the Washington Redskins so they could draft a linebacker named Alvin Toles. If Toles is recovered from a broken leg, maybe he can catch Montana and provide the Saints with their first winning season ever. Then again, maybe he can't.

THE EAST: The Redskins got the boost they needed by acquiring Rogers, who has the ability to replace John Riggins as the feature back in coach Joe Gibbs's offense. They are the only club in the NFC that strengthened themselves with a known NFL commodity. The addition of Rogers alone makes the Redskins the favorite to win their fourth straight title in the most balanced division in the NFC.

The St. Louis Cardinals moved to strengthen their improving defense by drafting Freddie Joe Nunn, this year's answer to San Francisco pass rusher Fred Dean. If you can't beat 'em, join 'em. In Neil Lomax, the Cardinals have the NFC quarterback rated closest to Montana. In Roy Green, they have the most explosive wide receiver in the conference.

The Giants moved to improve a weakness at running back by signing United States Football League 1,000-yard rusher Maurice Carthon. If Carthon is understandably weary coming off a spring season, the Giants will look toward No. 1 draft choice George Adams of Kentucky. Of all the chasers the Giants came closest to the 49ers last postseason.

The Cowboys say they have an improved attitude. Improving themselves at wide receiver probably would help more. Their attitude was shaken when the 49ers jumped one spot ahead of them to draft Jerry Rice. The Cowboys settled for defensive end Kevin Brooks. He can rush the passer, but can he catch passes?

The Eagles had the ninth pick in the draft and had to settle for the fourth offensive tackle on the board: Indiana's Kevin Allen. That means they hope to extract themselves from the East basement by lining up with someone projected as second-team all-rookie.

THE CENTRAL: This division hired two-and-a-half new coaches, the only new faces in the NFC. They are Tampa Bay's Leeman Bennett, a former winner in Atlanta, Detroit's Darryl Rogers, a former winner in college, and Minnesota's Bud Grant, who counts as a half after a whole year off.

The Bears had the 26th-ranked pass offense in the league last year, so they drafted two defensive players for their No. 1-ranked defense in hopes of shutting out everybody. The 49ers beat them, 23-0, in the title game. Maybe the Bears can force a 0-0 tie this time.

The Packers think they can contend if they can only protect Lynn Dickey, their fragile quarterback. They drafted two rookies to help.

The Bucs moved to shore up an eroding defense, but it may take this team a year to get used to Bennett. Unlike John McKay, the only coach the Bucs have ever known, Bennett might say something nice about his players from time to time.

The Vikings are three years away, according to Grant. By then, maybe Walsh's future will have arrived.

The Lions appear in as much disarray as the Saints. Rogers said they needed defense; they drafted offense. Rogers said quarterback Gary Danielson was coming off his best year, they traded him and acquired Buffalo's Joe Ferguson, who is coming off three of his worst years. To add to the confusion, Ferguson is 35, Danielson 34.

Even if no team in the NFC appears ready to supplant the 49ers, it is a conference full of stars, as last year's statistics showed. The NFC boasted the record-setting rusher Dickerson and the all-time rusher in Chicago's Walter Payton. The top seven runners in football lived in the NFC. The conference also had the top receiver in number of catches, Washington's Art Monk; the top receiver in yards, St. Louis's Roy Green, and the top receiver in average yards per catch, Green Bay's James Lofton. The NFC had six of the top 10 passers, all of them trailing Miami's Dan Marino. But three of them are aging: Bartkowski, Washington's Joe Theismann, and Dickey, and a fourth, Danielson, now plays in the AFC.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS

The San Francisco 49ers are so strong and so deep and so convincing that no expert with a straight face could pick them to lose. If Joe Montana cuts his face during a shaving commercial, the 49ers could have problems. Even so, coach Bill Walsh says of his backup quarterback, Matt Cavanaugh, "We suffer no loss of momentum or effectiveness with Matt."

Scary words indeed for NFC rivals. Walsh would rather have Montana, of course, as would anyone with a desire to win often and spectacularly. "Without a doubt, one of the finest performers under pressure that the game has ever seen," said Walsh.

The really frightening thing for 49er foes is that the 49ers are seldom under pressure. Montana has blockers and runners and receivers and a defense that surrendered the fewest points in the league last year. On a bad day, Montana can hand off or punt and the 49ers can still win.

The only question mark about the 1985 49ers is desire. Repeating is tougher than winning the first one, they say. It's not really true; it only seems that way. Repeating is only as tough as winning the first one. Players often forget how tough it is.

After the 49ers won Super Bowl XV following the 1981 season, they slept through the 1982 strike-shortened season with a 3-6 record. Walsh and his players admitted a let-down and they believe the memory of it will prevent a recurrence. In 1985, "The one thing we have to remember is that when we go back to training camp, we've got to practice," said cornerback Ronnie Lott. Easy to forget if you are the world champions.

The 49ers are characterized by so much depth that Walsh may have solved the age-old problems of injury and fatigue. You have one good running back, the 49ers have two. You have two tight ends, the 49ers use three. You have four or five pass rushers, the 49ers use nine. You have one good cornerback, the 49ers boast an entire Pro Bowl secondary.

Just when you think you have Walsh's choreographed system figured out, he puts a 270-pound guard named Gly Mc Nityre in the backfield as a lead blocker. In the NFC championship game against the Chicago Bears last year, Walsh had Montana and wide receiver Freddie Solomon switch positions for a play to allow Solomon to run an option play and Bear coaches to scratch their heads.

"Leave it to Walsh to think of something like that," said Bears' coach Mike Ditka. "He has the greatest quarterback in the game, and he fines him up at fullback."

Despite all the impressive credentials, the 49ers would be the first team since the 1978-79 Pittsburgh Steelers to win back-to-back

Super Bowls. Defense of the title starts with defense. Fortunately for Walsh, defensive coordinator George Seifert did not become head coach of the Indianapolis Colts. So Seifert can continue to direct traffic and substitute the right men for all the right situations.

Playing the right defense becomes a simpler matter, of course, when your offense is scoring 30 points a game. That's where Montana checks in as the team's most valuable asset. The 49ers scored 30 or more points in 10 games and gained a club-record 6,366 yards last season. Their club-record 475 points was second only to Miami's 513. As Montana proved in the Super Bowl, there is simply no better quarterback in football. Walsh's intricate system gets plenty of credit for making the offense go, but it is when the system breaks down that Montana's true value is demonstrated. No one is better at improvising. Montana makes something out of nothing more consistently than perhaps any quarterback who ever played. By its very definition, that ability is impossible to shut down. Despite Walsh's confidence in Cavanaugh, the 49ers cannot afford to lose Montana.

DWIGHT CLARK

Of course, Solomon could always step in and simply hand off to Wendell Tyler or Roger Craig. Running backs are an inadequate description of this tandem. Each accounted for 135 total yards in the Super Bowl, providing an astonishing balance of running and catching for the 49ers. Tyler had 1,262 yards rushing on the season, 1,492 rushing and passing. Craig led the club in receptions and compiled 1,324 total yards. "Craig may be the best all-purpose back in football," said Walsh. Derrick Harmon, Carl Monroe, and Bill Ring are good spot performers, and Alabama draftee Ricky Moore could challenge for a job.

On a team that has Dwight Clark, Russ Francis, and Renaldo Nehemiah to catch passes, Freddie Solomon was the man most opponents chose to double-team. Yet when Solomon endured an off day in the Super Bowl, the 49ers hardly missed him. Solomon is 32 and slowing down, so the 49ers jumped ahead in the draft to land a potential superstar in Jerry Rice of Mississippi Valley. And listen to what Walsh says about Mike Wilson: "Mike could be the most skilled of all our receivers." Francis is the best blocker among the tight ends. Earl Cooper caught the most passes, and young John Frank is "expected to become a starter sometime," said Walsh.

Montana has the luxury of three Pro Bowl starters on the offensive line in tackle Keith Fahnhorst, guard Randy Cross, and center Fred Quillian. What more could a quarterback want? How about 300-pound Bubba Paris at tackle and John Ayers—"one of the best pass-protecting guards in football," according to the coach. Alan Kennedy, Jesse Sapoulu, and Mark Bonner head the backup list.

On defense, the 49ers appear to have two or three teams. Not only do they employ nine defensive linemen, they play them three and four at a time. Lawrence Pilers, Dwaine Board, and Jeff Stover start, Fred Dean, Jim Stuckey, and Manu Tuiasosopo relieve. Gary Johnson, Louis Ketcher, and Michael Carter provide experience, size, and power. Returning veteran John Hartley will provide confusion, as in how can the 49ers use 10 pass rushers? Pilers starts his tenth year, Dean, Johnson, and Ketcher their eleventh. But this is no drawback for specialty players.

At linebacker, Keena Turner is the only player who never gets a rest because he is effective against the run and pass from his rightside position. Inside linebacker Riki Ellison led the club in tackles playing beside veteran Jack Reynolds, who won't be back. Dan Bunz moved to left outside linebacker and played well. Last year's No. 1 draft choice, Todd Shell, will push for a starting spot. Walsh also sees Mike Walter as a potential inside starter. Jeff Fuller is an example of the versatility in the 49er defense. He is listed as a "safety-linebacker" and plays in nickel situations.

The 49ers have the best secondary in football. Right cornerback Eric Wright emerged from the shadow of left cornerback Ronnie Lott with an outstanding season and was a late selection to the Pro Bowl. Safeties Carlton Williamson and Dwight Hicks also started in all-star game and punt-returner and backup cornerback Dana McLemore was an alternate. Tom Holmoe was effective as a nickel back and two veteran defenders who were hurt last year and could be factors are Mario Clark and Tim Collier.

Ray Wersching begins his thirteenth year as one of the league's least-known and best place-kickers. Max Runager joined the club in the third week and enjoyed his best season as a punter. McLemore was among the league leaders in punt returns. Carl Monroe was better than average as a kickoff-return specialist, although such a job on the 49ers can get lonely.

RIKI ELLISON

LOS ANGELES RAMS

The Rams believe strongly in the law of averages. They figure if they bring in enough quarterbacks over the years, one of them is bound to win. Critics argue that the Rams believe in the law of average quarterbacks.

Dieter Brock is the latest to get caught in the revolving door. The Rams signed the 34-year-old former Canadian League passer to a whopping $2.1 million contract for four years and said Vince Ferragamo could start packing with his injured hand. The deal confused last year's primary starter Jeff Kemp, who helped the Rams reach the playoffs as a wild-card entry. It also amused several rival clubs, who couldn't figure out how a quarterback with zero NFL experience could justify a huge contract for handing off to Eric Dickerson.

Such mystery is at the root of Ram history. In 1977, the Rams tried to extend the waning years of Joe Namath. In 1981, they propped up Dan Pastorini. In 1982, they counted on Bert Jones, who lasted four games. Not since Roman Gabriel, who was traded in 1973, has one Rams' quarterback put together two full seasons. Undaunted by such trivia is coach John Robinson, who cared only that Brock seems able to toss passes over the heads of linebackers, a skill that often escaped the strong-armed Ferragamo.

'Brock has impressed me with his ability to compete, his gamesmanship. He's a drop-back-style passer who utilized the same repertoire in the CFL that's used in the NFL,' said Robinson. 'He has quick feet, sets up quickly and can get rid of the ball. He also has a good touch and an amazingly strong arm. And he can throw the touch pass, the up-and-down over the linebackers.'

Quarterbacks are barely more than a necessary luxury to Robinson, who has Dickerson and a penchant for running nurtured by years of tutoring USC tailbacks. Robinson points out that in his last nine years of coaching, including seven at USC, he used eight different quarterbacks and was usually successful.

Brock's addition is expected to better complement an offense built around the most awesome threat in the game today, Dickerson. With Dickerson raising the NFL one-season rushing record to 2,105 yards, the Rams were able to gain a wild-card playoff berth and a 10-6 record. Dickerson is so good that the Rams could even pay catch-up football with him. Just think what even a little bit of passing might do. Last year, the Rams passed fewer times than anyone else in the league. With Brock, they have a man who passed for 34,830 yards and 210 touchdowns. Robinson wants Dickerson, for one, to catch more passes. 'He caught 51 his first year and just 21 last year,' said Robinson. 'It may be surprising to some, but I expect Eric to be better in 1985.' Dickerson expects to be richer and has hired former boxing champion Ken Norton as his agent. Behind Dickerson, the Rams have the talented Barry Redden.

Wide receivers Henry Elard, Ron Brown and Drew Hill expect to catch more than the 71 passes they caught last year, and if they can maintain their whopping average of 21 yards per catch, the passing attack will improve considerably. Experience will be valuable. Elard was a starter for the first time. Brown astonished Robinson by his progress after a year out of football to compete in the

DIETER BROCK

Olympic Games Vanderbilt's Chuck Scott was drafted in the second round and could be a possession type receiver to complement the rest. Robinson is counting on the return of tight end Mike Barber from a knee injury. With Barber and David Hill, the Rams can line up two of the best blocking and receiving tight ends in football. Hill and Mike Guman also serve as the line back in the single back set.

Robinson admits his offensive line "has just about everything you can ask for. Experience, talent, leadership, depth, and a solid work ethic about itself. It is likely the strongest unit on our team." Opponents would argue it certainly holds its own. No line is more effective. Tackles Bill Bain and Jackie Slater are 11- and 10-year veterans and guard Dennis Harrah is in his eleventh year. Guard Kent Hill is in his seventh and center Doug Smith is eighth. Of the five, only Bain hasn't made the Pro Bowl, and he had the best season of all of them last year. Tackle Irv Pankey and guard-tackle Russ Bolinger provide experienced depth.

Robinson cannot offer similar words of praise for his defensive line. He is looking hard for ways to increase the 43 sacks the Rams recorded last year. "We'll go to a four-man line a higher percentage of the time than in the past. We may be creating more specialized roles for our players," said Robinson.

The health of the team's best lineman, Jack Youngblood, is a major question mark. Advised to undergo back surgery after last season, Youngblood chose instead to try to rehabilitate on his own for his fifteenth season. "We're talking about one of the most strong-willed men I've ever known," said Robinson. "My hope and assumption is that Jack will be back. He will continue to have a major impact on our defense." The Rams also are hoping for the return to health of pass rusher Gary Jeter, who also had a back injury. Reggie Doss is a good end against the run and Greg Meisner is improving at nose tackle. Doug Reed and Charles DeJurnett provide depth, and Robinson is hoping former Buccaneer Booker Reese will make a comeback.

The Rams have experience at linebacker, where inside starters Jim Collins and Carl Ekern and outside starters Mel Owens and George Andrews form an efficient foursome. Robinson thought leading tackler Collins belonged in the Pro Bowl last season. Ekern is dependable, Owens improving, and Andrews so consistent he is "almost invisible," says Robinson. Mike Wilcher did a good job of filling in last year when Andrews was hurt.

Injury disrupted the backfield so much last season that Robinson had to start several combinations of players. To help solidify the area, the Rams made Texas's Jerry Gray their No. 1 draft choice. Like former top pick Johnnie Johnson, Gray has the talent to play safety and the speed to play the corner, so the Rams have several options. Former Pro Bowler Gary Green is one corner and Leroy Irvin is coming off his best season at the other. Johnson and the veteran No. 10 Cromwell are the safeties with Eric Harris and Vince Newsome experienced backups.

The Rams shored up their punting by making Clemson's Dale Hatcher a third-round pick. Mike Lansford made 17 of his last 18 field goals. Redden led the NFC in kickoff-return average. Elard led the NFC in punt-return average. The punt- and kickoff-coverage teams both finished second in the NFL.

ATLANTA FALCONS

For a team that lost its best runner, its best receiver and its No. 1 quarterback in 1984 the Atlanta Falcons did about as well as could be expected, 4-12. Since there are still doubts about the return of running back William Andrews, receiver Billy (White Shoes) Johnson and quarterback Steve Bartkowski, there are obvious questions about whether the Falcons can improve on the 4-12 record.

The 32-year-old Bartkowski is expected to return for his eleventh season, but his right knee is not too thrilled about it. It has undergone major surgery twice and minor surgery three times. Bartkowski was sacked 40 times in 11 games last year before he was knocked out for the season in the twelfth week. The Falcons gave up a league-leading 67 sacks and Bartkowski is intent on getting more protection. If they can't promise him blockers they at least can give him dollars.

Andrews is a bigger question mark. His knee was virtually wrecked last preseason and there is simply no way anyone can predict his future until he actually does return. The Falcons are not even expected to experiment with Andrews until the regular season opens. In that respect, he's in the same boat as another superstar running back, the Detroit Lions' Billy Sims.

Johnson was knocked out with a knee injury in the sixth week of last season, and although he has demonstrated remarkable resilience before, the man is 33 years old. Someday the white shoes are bound to fade.

Because Bartkowski, Andrews and Johnson accounted for 84 percent of the Falcons' offense in 1983, it is little wonder coach Dan Henning missed them in 1984 and is anxious about them for 1985. So are the Falcons faithful, or what is left of them. Only 15,000 fans showed up for the finale last season.

The Falcons would appear to need several drafts full of Rick Bryans to stem their downward spiral. Bryan was the No. 1 choice last year who led the club in solo tackles from his defensive right-tackle position. Although he played so well he was named defensive rookie of the year, the Falcons' needs are so great that Henning is switching Bryan to left end. Somehow the Falcons feel that will shore up the pass rush, although two of the league's better rushers line up at right tackle, Dallas

Henning's outlook for the season is more honest than hopeful. "It's no secret. We've got to find some people who can perform at a higher level than we performed at a year ago." He hopes two new people will come from the draft: offensive tackle Bill Fralic of Pitt and defensive lineman Mike Gann of Notre Dame.

Despite his age, Bartkowski's completion percentage has increased for seven straight years. He led the league last year at an impressive 67.3 percent. With only Mike Moroski and Dave Archer backing him up, Bartkowski's availability becomes even more crucial. While his arm remains perhaps the strongest in the game, his durability will never be in question. He is fragile; hasn't lasted a full season since 1982. As insurance, the Falcons added four-year veteran Bob Holy, who played under Henning in Washington, and Atlanta's sixth-round draft choice in 1984, Duke's Ben Bennett. The Falcons signed Bennett after the former all-time-leading NCAA passer spent a year with Jacksonville in the United States Football League.

The loss of Johnson hurt the entire receiving corps. He made most of his receptions from the H-back position coming out of the backfield. That alleviated pressure on starting wide receivers Stacey Bailey and Alfred Jackson. Bartkowski threw nine touchdown passes in the first four games. In the last eight, he threw only five. Johnson went down in game six. Although Bailey and Jackson both enjoyed productive seasons statistically, the scoring power of the offense was diminished. Floyd Hodge, Willie Curran, Perry Tuttle, and Virgil Seay will vie for backup spots. Arthur Cox and Cliff Benson man the starting tight-end and H-back positions, respectively, and both have been pleasant surprises. Between them, they caught 67 passes, more than any other tight-end combination in Falcon history.

Gerald Riggs proved a more than adequate replacement for the injured Andrews in the Falcons' one-back set. He finished fourth in the league in rushing, with 1,486 yards, and established five club records despite missing a game and a half with an ankle injury. Riggs's talent and production leaves Henning with a potential question he would love to face: what to do if Andrews comes back. The answer might depend on whether Johnson returns. If the Falcons can't pass as well as they would like, they might have to run the ball more. Talented third back Lynn Cain would approve. The acquisition of veteran Joe Washington gives Henning another dimension.

Falcons quarterbacks were sacked 67 times, the standard for ineptitude in the league. Again, injuries were a good excuse, but the Falcons have an offensive line with 39-year-old Jeff Van Note still starting at center. Including the tight ends, the Falcons had 23 holding penalties. Left tackle remains in the capable hands of Mike Kenn and right tackle is a question. Fralic could quickly answer. Brett Miller played last year despite a broken wrist and will be challenged by Fralic and Eric Sanders. Left guard R.C. Thieleman played with a "bowling ball" cast on a broken index finger. Right guard John Scully is solid. Joe Pellegrini, Wayne Radloff, Mike Chapman and Dan Dufour provide depth.

Although the defense moved up from 25th to 13th last year, there is room for additional improvement. Therefore, Bryan will move from right tackle to left end. Mike Pitts will move from left end to left tackle. Gary Burley will move from left tackle to right tackle. Right end Don Smith will stay put. Gann could challenge inside. The Falcons made only 38 sacks last year, led by Smith's 6 1/2. Andrew Provenza, Dan Benish, and Roy Harris are backups.

Injuries hurt the Falcons at linebacker a year ago, so there will be pressure on outside starters John Rade and Al Richardson. David Frye collected 4 1/2 sacks and played well enough for Rade on the left side to merit a full-time look. Young Thomas Benson is also a factor on the left side. Jeff Jackson and Rydell Malancon will challenge Richardson on the right side. In the middle, veterans Buddy Curry and Fulton Kuykendall managed to share time and stay healthy last year and will again be expected to provide solid leadership and performance for the defense.

Change in the secondary is a possibility only one year after safety James Britt and right cornerback Kenny Johnson switched positions. Johnson led the team in interceptions, with five, and Britt led the team in passes defended. But left cornerback Bobby Butler is under fire after making two interceptions in the opener and none the rest of the way. Safety

Tom Pradomore is being challenged by Scott Case. The Falcons intercepted only 12 passes all season.

When Johnson is healthy, the Falcon special teams are automatically exciting. He is only 55 yards shy of becoming the NFL's all-time leading punt returner. Sylvester Stamps was among the leading kickoff returners before he was hampered by an injury. Ralph Giacomarro was fifth in the NFL in punting and Mick Luckhurst hit a commendable 20 of 24 field goals.

Frank Warren can develop at nose tackle, the Saints hope to stem the running tide

Rickey Jackson, left outside linebacker is another 1-star. He is a big-play talent who cannot do it all. With the No. 1 draft choice they got for Rogers, they selected Tennessee Linebacker Alvin Toles, who is coming off a broken leg. Inside starter Dennis Winston, 30, was nagged by injuries last season. The other inside man, Jim Kovach, requested a trade. Weakside backer Whitney Paul plays better against the pass than the run, when his 215 pounds becomes an inviting target.

The No. 1 ranking against the pass is somewhat misleading because opponents didn't need to pass. In fact, the Saints had fewer passes attempted against them than any other team. Nevertheless, cornerbacks Dave Waymer and Johnny Poe and safeties Russell Gary and Frank Walz are not the club's biggest worry. They play fairly well and are backed by Rodney Lewis, Bobby Johnson and the latest in a long tradition of great Saints' names, Jitter Fields. He is a decent punt-return man, and the Saints have decent special teams. Running back Tyrone Anthony and wide receiver Kenny Duckett help Fields return kickoffs. Hansen's excellent punting is complemented by the better-than-average place-kicking of Morten Andersen.

NFC East

WASHINGTON REDSKINS

The Washington Redskins were so wounded last year that it was hard to remember they won their third straight NFC East Division title. After they lost the NFC semifinal playoff game to the Chicago Bears, they sounded like they had sunk to the depths two years after winning Super Bowl XVII.

They counted 30 players who were listed on injured reserve at some point. Pride was No. 31. So haunted were they by the specter of injury that they noticed an eerie symmetry to the hospital list and decided it told the story of their entire season. They were leading the Bears, 3-0, in the NFC semifinal, when John Riggins made a key first down on a fourth and one. But guard Ken Huff broke an ankle on the play and the Redskin running game was never the same. In reviewing the carnage of the season, they discovered that Huff was the first of the Redskins to go on injured reserve when he dislocated a kneecap in the first preseason game. Among other injured players attempting comebacks in 1985 are former Pro Bowlers Mark Murphy, Charlie Brown, Tony Peters, and Jeff Bostic. Then there is Riggins himself, who must decide whether there is any mileage left in a body classified as an antique for a running back.

Regardless of Riggins's plans, the Redskins moved to beef up their running attack by obtaining former Heisman Trophy winner George Rogers from the New Orleans Saints. It enables coach Joe Gibbs to maintain his offensive philosophy of run first. Quarterback Joe Theismann can't produce points without help, and Theismann isn't getting any younger himself. In fact, the Redskins may be on the brink of a major rebuilding program.

"Several guys on our team are going to be making some major decisions that no doubt will affect our team," said Gibbs. "This year we have an unusual number of guys who will be sizing up their careers."

In spite of changing times, however, the Redskins are the defending champions again, and they did overcome their problems last year to win their third straight title. To forecast anything less for 1985 is to tread heavily on a growing tradition of excellence.

"People have a tendency to talk down about last year," said Gibbs. "I thought it was a real gutsy performance by our team the way we bounced back at the end of the year when it was all on the line and the Redskins were the only ones who were able to step up and take it. For me, it's the realization that we were one touchdown away from going to the championship game last year. How can we make up that one touchdown?"

One touchdown wouldn't seem to make that much difference to a team that has averaged over 30 points a game under Theismann for the last two seasons. This is a team whose 39-10 record over the last three years is the NFL's best. Theismann deserves much of the credit and shows no signs of slowing down despite his age. "He seems to play better each year," said Gibbs. Statistically, Theismann failed to improve his passer rating in 1984 for the first time since 1980, but he still finished sixth in the league. Behind Theismann, Gibbs wants to look at the untested Jay Schroeder and Babe Laufenberg during the preseason.

We'll see where they are and hope one of them steps forward to be the guy who down the road will eventually take Joe's place.

1984 STATISTICS

Rogers should immediately solidify the running-back situation, where the 36-year-old Riggins and his 32-year-old replacement, Joe Washington, seemed consistently plagued by the ravages of age. (Washington was traded to Atlanta.) Gibbs likes to have his teams run at least 30 times a game. In games in which they have, the Redskins are 38-4. Rogers should be able to handle that kind of load. Gibbs likes special teams' standout Otis Wonsley, who could get a look, and he was impressed by everything about rookie Keith Griffin except his fumbles.

Receiving is an area of much less concern. The expected return of Charlie Brown will only make a good situation better. Without the threat of Brown, Art Monk nevertheless set an NFL record with 106 catches last season. Calvin Muhammad filed in adequately, but Brown is a two-time Pro Bowl participant. With Don Warren, Rick Walker, Mark McGrath, and Clint Didier, Gibbs is one of the few coaches in football with virtually no worries at tight end. Warren is a good blocker and clutch player. Walker and Didier provide the versatility required in the one-back offense. Gibbs also likes Mike Williams and Anthony Jones.

On the offensive line, the Hogs appear easier than in years past, and 37-year-old "Head Hog" George Starke may decide he is tired of bringing home the bacon. He was hurt and replaced by former guard Mark May at right tackle. That put the 32-year-old Huff at right guard. Gibbs is concerned about the return of center Jeff Bostic from a knee injury. He might not know until the season starts. Rick Donnalley was a good replacement. On the left side, all-stars Joe Jacoby and Russ Grimm are solid, but there is no depth.

The line on the other side of the ball gives Gibbs good cause for confidence. It helped the Redskins set a team record with 66 sacks and also allowed just 99.3 yards rushing per game, second-best in the league. "One of the strongest parts of our team," said Gibbs. Ends Dexter Manley and Charles Mann both played well, with Manley coming off a down year to lead the club in sacks, with 13½. Competition behind them will be interesting among veterans Tony McGee and Tom Beasley and injured youngsters Todd Liebenstein and Steve Hamilton. Inside, Darryl Grant and Dave Butz are still going strong, although Butz is 35. Veteran Perry Brooks provides depth.

Linebacking is another solid area for defensive coordinator Richie Petitbon. Gibbs thinks inside linebacker Neal Olkewicz played "up to his ability better than anybody on our team last year." Larry Kubin and Pete Cronan also are favorites of the coaches. Outside, Rich Milot, Monte Coleman, and Mel Kaufman give the Redskins experience against both the run and pass. Gibbs calls Kaufman one of his most underrated players.

At cornerback, the Redskins are in excellent shape. Vernon Dean shook injury and returned to his rookie form last season. Darrel Green made the Pro Bowl and grew in confidence every week. To further solidify the position, the Redskins traded up to land San Diego State's Tony Nixon in the second round of the draft. Ken Coffey, Mark Murphy, Curtis Jordan, Greg Williams, and Tony Peters will fight it out for the two safety spots.

Ageless Mark Moseley finished second in NFC scoring last year, although he hit only two of seven field-goal attempts outside 40 yards. Jeff Hayes is a better-than-average kickoff man and punter. Mike Nelms remains one of the league's premier kick and punt returners. The Redskins almost always cover kicks well.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS

Fans of the St. Louis Cardinals figure they already have won their most important battle of 1985. Their team is going to stay in St. Louis. Anything extra is gravy. Owner Billy Bidwell threatened to leave the smallest stadium in the league for Phoenix or New York or any place he could sell more tickets to see Neil Lomax and Roy Green.

There was a time, of course, when not many people would have cared whether the Cardinals came or went because the Cardinals themselves so often didn't know whether they were coming or going. Now, veteran receiver Pat Tilley calls this "the best offense I've seen since I've been in St. Louis." That includes some impressive memories of Terry Metcalf, Mel Gray, Ike Harris, and Jim Hart.

The thing that really distinguishes these Cardinals, however, is defense. After years of trying to compete with half the ingredients, the Cardinals put together a defense that jumped from 22nd in the rankings all the way to 8th. With the addition of No. 1 draft choice Freddie Joe Nunn of Mississippi and No. 2 choice Scott Bergstedt of Wisconsin, the Cardinals gave notice they are not satisfied.

With an offense that ranked third, the Cardinals were one of only four clubs in football boasting both an offense and a defense ranked among the top 10. Such an accomplishment leaves coach Jim Hanifan saying this about 1985: "An area we have to improve on is special teams." Indeed, a missed 50-yard field goal by Neil O'Donoghue in a 29-27 loss to the Redskins cost the Cardinals the NFC East title. Place-kicking is not the extent of Hanifan's concern, however. Punting and punt and kickoff coverage also need improvement if the Cardinals are to put together the final pieces of a playoff team.

Consistency on offense is another concern. The Cardinals lost coordinator Rod Dowhower, who became head coach of the Indianapolis Colts. Although his basic philosophy is likely to remain under former backfield coach Dick Jameson, the Cardinals must cut down on turnovers (they lost 20 fumbles) and on penalties (they were 28th in penalty differential). The Cardinals came close enough in 1984 to entertain legitimate hope for 1985. Five of their seven losses were by a touchdown or less and one of the losses was so controversial at it helped pave the way for a rule change. Roy Green was called for a controversial offensive-pass-interference penalty to nullify a touchdown in a 24-17 loss to the Cowboys. When owners met during the offseason to mull a liberalization of the interference rules, they watched film of the Green penalty and were sympathetic.

Ordinarily Green and his quarterback, Lomax, don't elicit sympathy, only envy. They are the two main reasons for Cardinals' success. If Lomax is the bread, Green is the butter. Green's 12 touchdown catches led the NFC. Only Miami's Mark Clayton, with 18, had more. Green's 19.9 yards per catch, registered on 78 catches, put him second only to Green Bay's James Lofton as a deep threat among those with at least 40 receptions. Lofton averaged 22 yards on 62 catches.

Lomax deserves much of the credit and gets it. "What we saw last year was the emergence of Neil Lomax into one of the topflight quarterbacks in the NFL," said Hanifan. To be sure, only Joe Montana, Dan Marino, and Tony Eason had higher passer ratings. "Neil and I share the feeling that he could be more consistent," said Hanifan. Behind Lomax, the Cardinals employ two untested second-year men: Rick McIvor and Kyle Mackey.

Green has more help at receiver in the veteran Tilley and second-year man Clyde Duncan. A first-round pick last season, Duncan has yet to catch his first pass because of injury and limited play. At tight end, Doug Marsh has blossomed into a consistent all-around blocking and catching threat who has eliminated the need to play tight.

As long as Otis Anderson is around, the Cardinals have few worries at running back. He has developed into a fine receiver and blocker as well as a team leader. He always has been able to run, but now Hanifan calls him "a great football player." Fullback Earl Ferrell has breakaway speed, the backups Stump Mitchell, Randy Love, Willard Harrell and Perry Harrington, are reliable.

The defection of left tackle Luis Sharpe to the USFL will cause problems in the offensive line that Hanifan thought he had solved. He often referred to Sharpe as the best left tackle in the game. He will be difficult to replace. Art Plunkett is the likely candidate. Tootie Robbins can be dominant on the right side, and the Cardinals are solid inside with left guard Terry Stieve, right guard Joe Bostic, and center Randy Clark. Carlos Scott and Doug Dawson are backups, but the Cardinals need another tackle.

The St. Louis defense, once a poor stepchild to the offense, is anchored by a line featuring outstanding ends Curtis Greer and Al Baker. With David Galoway at right tackle and Ellis Grooms, Mark Duda, and Ramsey Dardar sharing time at left tackle, the Cardinals have a solid front four that will be bolstered by the addition of Bergold. Baker has been working overtime in the weight room to help him hold down the left-end position.

At linebacker, the Cardinals jelled as soon as they let E.J. Junior stay in the middle. There aren't many better middle linebackers in the game and Junior's Pro Bowl trip proved it. Nunn should provide instant impact at either outside linebacker or as a pass-rush specialist. Thomas Howard developed fast at left linebacker after arriving from the Chiefs. He will have a head start this year. Charlie Baker overcame injury to hold down the right spot. Bob Harris should be at full strength this year and vying for a starting job. Veterans Kurt Alberman and Dave Ahrens provide depth.

The secondary is full of hard hitters and experience. Lionel Washington is becoming one of the better cornerbacks in football on the left side and Wayne Smith was consistent on the right, although the oft-injured Jeff Griffin hopes to fight for a job. Leonard Smith is steady at strong safety and Hanifan calls free safety Benny Perin "the blood and guts" of the secondary and "one of the finest at his position in the history of this ball club." That puts him in the company of the incomparable Larry Wilson. Versatile Lee Nelson provides excellent insurance.

Mitigating the poor season of punter Car Brdson was his number of kicks inside the 20-yard line, 19, the most of his career. Hanifan likes the confidence of O'Donoghue if not his percentage of 23 for 35 field goals. "Some kickers may have reservations about that 53-yarder or the wind factor, but every time I look over at him for a possible field-goal try, he always gives me that thumbs-up sign and never backs down," said Hanifan. Stump Mitchell is the best combination kickoff- and punt return man in football. He was third in the NFC in punt returns, second in kickoff returns.

NEW YORK GIANTS

The New York Giants not only played well enough in 1984 to raise hopes for 1985, they played well enough to raise ticket prices by $3 apiece. The scale of $14 and $17 will still rank from the middle to lower half of ticket prices in the NFL, the Giants hastened to add. Of course they expect to be worth much more than that.

The Giants expect so much, in fact, that they are extra careful about dwelling on their impressive 9-7 record of 1984, a turnaround from 3-12-1 of 1983. They are too young to remember firsthand, but former Giant teams have experienced winning seasons too. There have been four others since 1963 but none consecutive. An occasional, isolated winning season is not what these Giants have in mind.

The Giants finished second in a tough division and beat the Rams in the NFC wild-card game. Then they got closer to the world championship 49ers in the NFC semifinals than either the Bears got in the title game or the Dolphins got in the Super Bowl. Still, coach Bill Parcells couldn't be lured into a positive reflective mood.

You don't get a medal for playing well, Parcells said. "You only get medals for winning. Our goal was to get to the Super Bowl. I'm not happy just because we got to the playoffs. We are all disappointed, but we're going to work our butts off and then get back here."

Mentioning the Super Bowl and the Giants in the same sentence a year ago would have been cause for a different kind of commitment than Parcells is taking about in 1985. But the Giants got instant help from a supposedly weak 1984 draft. If they can come close to matching that improvement this year, they could quickly become the team to beat in a division full of contenders.

The key this year is the same that helped unlock the door last year: the health of quarterback Phil Simms. In his seventh year now, Simms finally demonstrated an ability to shake off the physical abuse encountered routinely by nearly all quarterbacks. He became on the eighth quarterback in league history to surpass 4,000 yards passing in a season. There is no quarterback controversy in the Giants' part of New York. Simms's passer rating of 78.1 placed in the middle of the pack, indicating plenty of room for statistical improvement. Cutting down on interceptions would be a logical first step in this process, but the added experience of young receivers and blockers plus the addition of new runners could make Simms's progress automatic. Jeff Rutledge and Jeff Hostetler provide capable backup help, but between them they attempted one pass in 1984.

The Giants ended up starting two rookies: a wide receiver in Lionel Manuel and Bobby Johnson. Manuel was subbing on occasion for veteran Earnest Gray, who was hampered by a hand problem that finally forced him onto injured reserve. Johnson was the surprise rookie of the season, a free agent who started every game and led the club with 48 catches for 795 yards and seven touchdowns. No. 2 draft choice Stacy Robinson will add great speed. The continued development of Zeke Mowatt as a complete tight end is another factor in the Giants' climb up the offensive ladder. Mowatt, like Johnson, a former free agent (1983), tied Johnson in number of receptions, with 48, six for touchdowns. Mowatt made the club as a blocker, so his receiving ability is a welcome plus. "Nobody makes the big play more often," said Simms.

Running the ball is an area that requires major improvement if the Giants want to take the next step. Rob Carpenter was the club's leading rusher last year with a meager 3.2-yard average. He will be pushed this year by Maurice Carthon, an addition from the New Jersey Generals who was a 1,000-yard rusher in the USFL. The real key is the development of No. 1 draft choice George Adams, who will challenge Joe Morris for a starting spot.

Youth served in the offensive line, where tackles Bill Roberts and Karl Nelson came through in their first seasons and allowed Parcells the luxury of beefing up inside. Roberts started at left tackle until sidelined by an injury for a while and former tackle Brad Benson moved to guard. Ex-guard Kelvin Belcher moved to center and showed good potential. When guard Billy Ard was hurt, Chris Godfrey started. Two other rookies, Conrad Goode and David Jordan, provide depth. Nelson was a 1983 draft choice who was injured until last season. At 6-6, 285, he is exactly the kind of player Parcells wants up front.

The Giants have bragged about their defense even in bad years. Last year, they showed they are not standing pat by playing four first-year men. Linebackers Carl Banks and Gary Reasons and cornerbacks Kenny Daniel and Perry Williams. Up front, they got all-pro play from nose tackle Jim Burt, who failed to get all-pro recognition. Ends Curtis McGriff, Leonard Marshall, Casey Merrill, and George Martin create pressure and backup nose tackle Jerome Sully provides insurance.

At linebacker the Giants continue to field an embarrassment of riches. Byron Hunt, No. 1 draftee Banks, and Andy Headen started six games apiece in the Giants' 18 game season. Fourth-round draft choice Reasons started beside veteran captain Harry Carson inside and proved as impressive as Banks. Lawrence Taylor is Lawrence Taylor on the right side, giving the Giants the equivalent of a twelfth man on the field as both pass rusher and defender. The incomparable Taylor merely led the club in tackles with 114 sacks, with 11½, and forced fumbles, with six. He is working on his interceptions.

In the backfield the Giants are looking forward to the return of all-star cornerback Mark Haynes, whose knee injury against the Cardinals in the fifteenth week of the season turned around the game immediately and ultimately may have cost the Giants a division title. To add depth Clemson's Tyrone Davis was drafted in the third round. In Haynes's place last year the Giants played former USFLer Kenny Daniel. Opposite Haynes on the right side, 1983 seventh rounder Perry Williams enjoyed his first season in 1984 by starting every game. At safety, the Giants are solid with strongside veteran Bill Currier and former No. 1 draft pick Terry Kinard at free safety.

New York's special teams were the biggest disappointment of 1984. They finished last in both net punting average and field-goal percentage, both unsettling statistics. The Giants thought place-kicker Ali Hajj-Sheikh and punter Dave Jennings would keep them worry-free in these areas for a while. Return men Pete Shaw, Lionel Manuel, and Frank Cephus also finished near the bottom of the heap. Former Navy officer Phil McConkey could help if he shakes injury. The Giants didn't cover kicks so well either.

GARY HOGEBOOM

DALLAS COWBOYS

The Dallas Cowboys bottomed out last year with a 9-7 record that would make the New Orleans Saints envious. The Cowboys were embarrassed because they didn't even make the playoffs. But before you write them off for 1985, consider this reminder from a recent Cowboy publicity release:

"A year ago, the Cowboys were 12-4, in the playoffs and in turmoil. In 1984, the Cowboys dropped to 9-7 and missed the playoffs for the first time in a decade, but they also feel better about themselves than they have in years."

Why is this true? Coach Tom Landry said his team went through an attitude adjustment last year that will pay big dividends in 1985. "We're going to be much better from a team unity standpoint than we've been in a number of years," said Landry.

Losing means winning? What Landry noticed was how his team reacted to losing. After losing, 14-3, to the previous year's winless Buffalo Bills last November 18, running back Tony Dorsett called his team "the laughing-stock of the NFL." It turned out that Landry wore a smile of his own. The Cowboys bounced back to win their next two games and barely lose their final two.

"Any time you have a team that reaches a low point, either you have sufficient character to pull out of those bottoms or you don't. If you have character which we proved we did, then you finish with a winning record, and that's extremely important," said Landry.

Questioning the character of the Cowboys has been a popular pastime among Cowboy friends and foes alike. It was sometimes as popular as questioning the quarterback. The Cowboys still have "A Quarterback Situation" in 1985, but somehow it doesn't seem to be quite "The Quarterback Problem" it was in 1984. By losing his job to Gary Hogeboom at the start of last season, Danny White might have won friends. He proved that he alone certainly hasn't prevented the Cowboys from getting to the Super Bowl recently. In Dallas you can have Drew Pearson, Billy DuPree, Harvey Martin, Pat Donovan, and Robert Newhouse all retire at once, but it's still the quarterback's fault. Not only did the Cowboys have to overcome all those exits last year, they lost their best offensive tackle, Jim Cooper, in a dance floor accident before the season. After White reclaimed his job in the second half of the year, Landry noticed a change.

"The great thing about football is having confidence in the people around you. When you go into a game and you know that you can count on the guy to your left and right, it's great. We now have that. We didn't have that the last couple of years," said Landry.

Landry says White is his No. 1 man, but stops far short of saying he is his No. 1 and only. "We have three good quarterbacks in White, Hogeboom and Steve Peluer as good a group as anybody's, I think," said the coach. How long will it take the faithful to start chanting for Peluer? Landry liked the way White overcame a tough mental situation. "He still wasn't where he wanted to be, but at least he gained the confidence of the team and everybody felt like he could win for them," said Landry. He also said Hogeboom "performed pretty well. He didn't produce the touchdowns and big plays we need at that position."

All the quarterbacks hope they have more productive targets. The Cowboys have to pass in order for Dorsett and the ground game to be effective. To pass well, they have to catch well. Receiving is the team's No. 1 problem. Doug Donley's chronically bad shoulder forced him off the team only one year after he tried to replace future Hall of Famer Drew Pearson. Tony Hill's season was interrupted by a shoulder injury. Mike Renfro played well after coming from Houston, but he is not a game breaker. At tight end, Doug Cosbie is a Pro Bowl performer, but the Cowboys need more help on the receiving end if they hope to improve on the fourth-place finish.

"Our running game is basically something that takes place as the passing game works. We are not a team that dominates on the ground—never have been—without a good passing game," said Landry. A lot of teams could dominate with Dorsett, who enjoys 1,000-yard seasons without getting worn down physically. Now starting his ninth year, he needs only 475 yards to become the sixth player to rush for 10,000 yards. Dorsett also has become a mature team leader. Landry hopes he has landed a backup in fourth-round choice Robert Lavette of Georgia Tech. Timmy Newsome will get the starting fullback job beside Dorsett, with Ron Springs, Chuck McSwain, James Jones, Gary Allen, and Norm Granger all vying for reserve roles.

Landry thought his offensive line performed well last year considering all the injuries. Besides Cooper, every other starter missed time. In one game, the Cowboys started five guards. One of them, Herb Scott, has indicated he will retire, leaving the guard spots to Glen Titensor and Kurt Petersen. Landry says former No. 1 draft choice Howard Richards probably will join them permanently and not fool around at tackle anymore. Tom Rafferty is a solid center and Cooper and Phil Pozderac should start at the tackle spots, backed by Brian Baldinger and John Hunt.

If the offense can score, the defense is good enough for the Cowboys to win big again. The main reason is a front four that remains solid as long as Randy White is healthy. There simply is not a better defensive football player in captivity. He plays right tackle, which seems too confining a description for what he actually does. Jim Jeffcoat quickly proved that Harvey Martin had played too long at right end. Jeffcoat's 11½ sacks trailed White by one. Ed Jones is still "Too Tall" and too tough against the run at left end. John Dutton is the left tackle unless Don Smerek decides it's time for him to make a move. No. 1 pick Kevin Brooks of Michigan might have a hard time cracking the lineup.

The Cowboys will lose Bob Breung at middle linebacker but feel comfortable with Eugene Lockhart and Steve DeOssie. Lockhart has a knack for finding ball-carriers that endears him to Landry. Outside linebacker is a problem, especially after the loss of last year's No. 1 draft choice, Billy Cannon Jr., to a chronic neck injury. Landry expects Jeff Rohrer to win the right spot and Mike Hegman to remain solid on the left side. Dallas made Virginia Tech's Jesse Penn its No. 2 pick.

The secondary is as solid as it has been in years, with Everson Walls and Ron Fellows at the starting cornerback and Victor Scott, a capable backup who might get some time at safety. Dexter Clinkscale and Michael Downs provide excellent play at the safety spots, backed by Bill Bates and Dennis Thurman.

In the special-teams area, the Cowboys are as consistent as ever. "We need to get a punter," said Landry. "We're putting undue pressure on White to continue the punting." Every year, the Cowboys want to replace White as a punter, and every year he ends up punting. Rafael Septien is an excellent place-kicker. Landry wants someone to help Gary Allen return punts and kickoffs. Bill Bates hardly needs any help covering them.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES

The Philadelphia Eagles were sold during the offseason by trucker Leonard Tose to auto dealer Norman Braman, which unfortunately won't put them any closer to the driver's seat on the tough NFC East expressway. Would you buy a used team from these men? The Eagles improved from a bad 5-11 model in 1983 to a slightly better 6-9-1 edition in 1984. Still, they trailed the Redskins, Giants, Cardinals and Cowboys on the road to the top. Prospects for moving into the passing lane in 1985 probably would depend on an unforeseen stall by others.

This is a club that played hard for coach Marion Campbell and refused to go into the tank after a 1-4 start. Yet they are a club that is still counting on a 34-year-old quarterback, Ron Jaworski, who is coming off a broken leg. Under Campbell, a defense that once was good enough to get to a Super Bowl was revitalized behind an excellent pass rush and reckless safeties Wes Hopkins and Ray Ellis, perhaps the most feared tandem in football. Yet the Eagles didn't stop the run very well and on offense they couldn't run a lick. Even in an age of fancy passing, a team that can't run nor stop the run is facing a combination of problems bound to doom.

Campbell is well aware of both inadequacies. Halfback Wilbert Montgomery, still effective at age 31, needs help from sidekicks as well as blockers. The offensive line gave up an unacceptable 60 sacks, many of them because defenses stopped the Eagles' running attack and teed off on the passers. Whether run blocking or pass blocking comes first, the Eagles know both need major repairs.

Potent ally Jaworski could have control of an explosive passing attack featuring wide receivers Mike Quick and Kenny Jackson, tight end John Spagnola and the versatile Montgomery. But such skill players are only expensive hood ornaments, luxury options that will seem worthless if the Eagles can't provide a better chassis and frame.

Most of the adversity was self-inflicted, resulting from the 1-4 start. During that time, the defense ranked 27th in the league and had caused just three turnovers. But by the end of the year, the swarming intensity had returned. The Eagles intercepted 20 passes, compared with a league-low eight in 1983. Hopkins and Ellis were responsible for 12 of the 20. The defense ranked twelfth in the league by the end and Campbell described it in terms his owners could easily understand. "Defensively, we got our motor running again," he said.

In 1985, the offense must shift out of low Jaworski's broken leg ended what is believed to be the longest playing streak for a quarterback in NFL history: 116 straight games. The injury occurred in the thirteenth week of the season against St. Louis, giving veteran backup Joe Pisarcik a rare chance to exercise. A complete recovery is expected for Jaworski who enjoys the full confidence of Campbell.

"I'm not worried about the rehabilitation," said Campbell. "He'll find a way to get it done; he always has. Ron will still have his mobility, and I think he has enough of it to do the job. Besides, he's basically always been a pocket passer and so are 90 percent of the quarterbacks today."

Before he went down, Jaworski was doing what Campbell called a "good job spreading the ball around, utilizing all the receivers."

That he was able to help fashion the eleventh-ranked pass offense in the league is remarkable considering the Eagles' inept running. If opponents know Jaworski can't count on gaining a few yards by handing off once in a while, they will severely test his mobility again. Piszczek, 33, proved he's adequate as a backup, but a look at the birthdates of both quarterbacks quickly focuses on a pressing issue for the Eagles. That's why they drafted Nevada-Las Vegas prospect Randall Cunningham in the second round to compete with young passers Dean May and Jeff Christensen.

Campbell thinks Montgomery can still run "if we can generate more holes." What convinced him was the way Wilbert ran when he caught passes with some space around him. Hubie Oliver is called "as good a blocking back as there is in the league" by the coach. Behind the two starters, however, the Eagles employ question marks. Michael Haddix averaged only 2.7 yards per carry. Michael Williams slumped after an impressive rookie year, and Andre Hardy got hurt. The Eagles will test the one-back offense in 1985.

The receiving corps is the Eagles' pride. Quick and Jackson both have exceptional ability after they catch the ball. Spagnola came off neck surgery to lead the conference tight ends in catches, with a club-high 65. Jackson missed five games because of a shoulder separation. Healthy, he can take a burden off Quick that has failed to keep him out of two straight Pro Bowls. "One of the premier players in the NFL today," said Campbell. Vyto Kab and Lawrence Sampleton provide better than average depth at tight end, and Tony Woodruff and Melvin Hoover are steady backups at wide receiver.

Offensive improvement rests directly on the line, where Campbell added three draft choices in the first six rounds. Indiana tackle Kevin Allen, North Carolina guard Greg Naron, and Texas A&M guard Ken Reeves. Tackles Dean Meraldi and Leonard Mitchell now have one full year of starting experience each, so they should be more consistent. Center Mark Denard and steady guards Ron Baker and Steve Kenney provide a good core. Rusty Russell, Peter Perot, Dave Pace, and Gerry Feehery provide depth.

The defensive line was one of the most effective in the league, contributing 48½ of the team-record 60 sacks. Ends Dennis Harrison and Greg Brown and nose tackle Ken Clarke combined for 38½ sacks—"more than any other trio in the league," said Campbell. "Those are big numbers, considering we don't blitz very often." End Byron Darby and nose tackle Harvey Armstrong also see action in the line.

Linebackers Jerry Robinson, Anthony Griggs, Joe Williams, and Reggie Wilkes all had good years in 1984, according to Campbell. But with the Eagles last in the league against the run, the linebackers need to get more active.

They all could follow the example of Hopkins and Ellis, "Frank and Jesse James," as Robinson calls them "Gangsters." Outlaws. They fly to the ball. Although it's safety first in the Eagle secondary, cornerbacks Roynell Young and Herman Edwards are capable performers and Elbert Foulkes will push for a starting spot after subbing for the injured Young last season. Brenard Wilson is an excellent backup at all four backfield positions.

The Eagles boast the best special teams in the league. Paul McFadden led the NFL in field goals as a rookie and will be trying to avoid the sophomore slump that claimed the Gants. Ali Haj-Sheikh, Mike Horan, another first-year man, gave the Eagles their best punting in several years.

KICKING BEARS

In the NFC Central Division, no team has repeated a championship since the Minnesota Vikings finished a string of six in 1978. In order to reverse this trend of occasional winners, the Chicago Bears reversed traditional thinking. They had the No. 1 defense in football in nearly every major category last year and attempted to strengthen it in the draft.

Despite starting five different quarterbacks last season and admitting an urgent need for better receivers, the Bears ignored the 26th-ranked pass offense and drafted defensive players in the first two rounds. Even the own players had a hard time understanding why. This was a team that set an NFL record for quarterback sacks last year. Half of its front four—Dan Hampton and Richard Dent, went to the Pro Bowl. Yet when it came time to draft, they surprised everyone by tabbing Cameron's gigantic tackle, William Perry. When they took him, he had shrunk from 370 to 318 pounds in three months. If he can stay hungry, the Bears think they can eat up the league. "We would rather pay with William Perry than against him," said personnel director Bill Tobin. The Bears fantasize that Perry at his best can free Hampton and Dent to perform at a manner of mayhem against opposing offenses. If Perry can occupy two blockers, the Bear ofense may not have to worry about scoring.

Coach Mike Ditka hopes he no longer has to worry about quarterbacks. Injuries forced him to use his sixth quarterback, Walter Payton, who quickly demonstrated he's quite satisfied to be the all-time leading rusher. He scrambled a lot from the shotgun formation. The No. 1 man, Jim McMahon, is coming off a rare injury (a lacerated kidney) and will be padded more heavily than he would like. When healthy McMahon is a resourceful leader who could end the Bears' worries about getting into the end zone. When McMahon was hurt, Steve Fuller proved a steal by guiding the Bears into the NFC title game. Fuller was hampered by two shoulder separations but again is ready for a backup role.

Payton is ready for his eleventh season. He is only 31 years old and remains a remarkable physical specimen. If he doesn't stay that way, of course, the Bears might resemble the Rams without Eric Dickerson. Besides running, Payton blocks and catches and inspires the whole team. Behind him, the Bears are lacking, but fullback Matt Suhey plays beside him and complements Payton's blocking and running well. Big back Calvin Thomas hopes he has corrected shoulder problems.

Receiving is the Bears' biggest question mark on offense. They have the speed in Willie Gault, but health and depth are concerns. Dennis McKinnon, who plays opposite Gault, developed into a primary target before injuring a knee. Like most people, McKinnon doesn't have the speed Gault has, but the Bears like him because he will go places that Gault won't catch balls. Ken Margerum, coming off a serious knee injury, and third-round draft pick James Maness of TCU are supposed to light a fire under Gault. Tight ends are another area of uncertainty. Ditka had five candidates for his old position, and he may suit up himself if he isn't satisfied. Emery Moorehead is the fastest and best receiver of the bunch, but Ditka wants a bigger blocker. Mitch Krenk will challenge and so will Jay Said. Pat Dunsmore, and Tim Wrightman.

Ditka won a gamble with a young, big, and strong offensive line last season. Continued development is expected from tackles Jimbo Covert and Keith Van Horne, guards Mark Bortz and Kurt Becker, and center Jay Hilgenberg. Payton called Covert the best tackle in football last season and it is uncharacteristic of him to single out individuals. Bortz made a successful switch from defense. Depth remains untested except for veteran tackle

Andy Frederick. Tom Andrews and Stefan Humphries are in their second years.

The defensive line was hurting for depth too until the Bears amply filled it out with Perry. Defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan plans to put Perry at left tackle, where Steve McMichael was among the league leaders with 10 sacks last season. The Bears employ enough odd-man and five-man fronts to give everybody a chance to play. They claim that the addition of such an obvious nose tackle as Perry is no preview of a switch to the 3-4 alignment. Hampton and Dent form an all-pro right side and veteran Mike Hartenstine anchors left end. Tyrone Keys, Henry Waechter, and Dick Butkus's nephew Mark, will fight for backup jobs with later draft choices Charles Bennett of Southwest Louisiana and Pat Cor-yatt of Baylor. Hampton's coming off his third surgery on his right knee and probably won't play until the regular season.

At linebacker, the Bears boast three No. 1 draft choices plus the defensive player of the year in one poll, Mike Singletary. Left linebacker Otis Wilson deserved to join Singletary in the Pro Bowl and right linebacker A. Harris stayed ahead of last year's No. 1 Wilber Marshall with outstanding play. Marshall is expected to see more action this year, but no one knows exactly where Ron Rivera, last year's second-round pick, is a good backup coming off a season of nagging injuries.

The Bears exposed their lack of depth at cornerback in the NFC title game by lining up strong safety Todd Bell on the corner. To rectify the problem, they drafted little Reggie Phillips of SMU in hopes that his speed and cover ability will enable him to push starters Leslie Frazier and Mike Richardson. Frazier is coming off a foot injury and Richardson had an inconsistent season. If Bell signs a free-agent contract, he will continue to play the most versatile role in Ryan's multiple formations. Free safety Gary Fencik is a valuable team leader and Dave Duerson is ready to step in at either safety spot. Second-year cornerback Shaun Gayle is coming off a broken leg.

Ditka was disappointed with his special teams in general and vows to use regulars McKinnon and Gault to return punts and kickoffs. Coverage teams were better against punts than they were against kickoffs and fourth-round draft choice Kevin Butler could improve that with non-returnable kickoffs. The selection of Butler shocked incumbent kicker Bob Thomas, who is coming off his best year and has a string of 11 field goals in a row. Ditka said the better man will win the job. Punter Dave Finzer led the league in punts placed inside the 20, giving the No. 1 defense consistently good field position.

"The most important thing for this team to realize is that what you do one year has nothing to do with what you'll do the next year," said Ditka.

WISCONSIN BAY PACKERS

Now that the Green Bay Packers have figured out how to play for Forrest Gregg, the rest of the NFC is properly concerned. Such respect for an 8-8 team is possible only when the 1984 results are examined half by half. The Packers were 1-7 during the first half of Gregg's first year and 7-1 during the stretch. The Packers publicists cite "optimism and euphoria" in equal parts, prevailing among Packers backers. They point out that on'y Super Bowl champion San Francisco had a better second half of the 1984 season and that was only because the 49ers were a perfect 8-0.

Perfection is something even the most loyal Packer is not ready to claim. And Gregg himself sounds like he is bracing himself for large doses of reality. "As far as I'm concerned, we have no laurels to rest on," said Gregg. "We were eight-and-eight last year. That's 500 balls, and that's not good enough."

Leave it to a coach to talk negatively. At least two of Gregg's foremost players, quarterback Lynn Dickey and tight end Paul Coffman, called the 1984 Packers the best team they had played on. "It was almost like we were playing a gentlemen's game before," said linebacker Mike Douglass. "Now we're playing a dog-eat-dog game."

What the Packers did under Gregg was improve their defense from a pathetic last in the league to a reasonable sixteenth. For that, defensive coordinator Dick Modzelewski gets plenty of credit after taking over when the respected Hank Bullough left. Once Gregg got the offense headed in a similar direction by midseason, the Packers missed a wild-card berth by one game. If they hope to improve on that, much of the burden again must be shouldered by the 35-year-old Dickey. Fortunately for Packer fans, Dickey seems practically immune to the ravages of age and injury that routinely pile up on him. Even when he's hurt, he plays. And when he plays, the Packers are hard to beat.

In an attempt to keep Dickey healthy the Packers used their first draft choice on an offensive lineman. They thought so much of USC's Ken Ruettggers that they gave up their second-round pick to move higher in the first round to land him. Some observers think they could have landed quarterback Vince Ferragamo with a second-round pick as a different kind of protection for Dickey. In the third round they added San Diego State guard Rich Moran. At quarterback, they added journeyman Scott Brunner to the roster to compete with Randy Wright.

Dickey's primary receiver James Lofton remains the prototype at his position. His 22 yard average per catch put him ahead of everybody in the league. The speed of Phillip Epps opposite Lofton prevents teams from clamping down entirely on Lofton, but the Packers revealed a need for depth by drafting Walter Stanley in the fourth round. He hasn't played in college since 1981 and may help sooner as a kick returner than as a receiver. Ron Cassidy and Lenny Taylor are adequate backups. Coffman remains the best tight end in football in the opinion of many observers. Only Lofton catches more passes in Green Bay, but Coffman caught more for touchdowns, leading the club with nine. Texas A&M's Mark Lewis was drafted in the sixth round, but Coffman rarely needs help. Backup Ed West caught only seven passes, but five went for touchdowns.

The return of Eddie Lee Ivey at running back last year provided an unexpected gift for Gregg. His 552 yards rushing put him second to teammate Gerry Ellis's 581. Four other backs who contribute to a solid situation are Jessie Clark, Harlan Huckleby, Ray Crouse, and Del Rodgers. "This is probably one of our strong points right now," said Gregg.

The addition of Ruettggers and Moran is expected to beef up an area of concern. Moran played some center in college and could be considered at that position behind veteran Larry McCarren, who was injured last season. His replacement, Blake Moore, started the last four games. Another prospect is Mark Cannon, who was the long snapper as a rookie. Ruettggers is projected as either a tackle or a guard, but the Packers need more help at tackle. Huge Tim Huffman and Ron Hallstrom are entrenched in guard spots. Gregg wants to refrain from moving Huffman around. Hallstrom finally found a home and developed fast. At tackle, injury bothered Karl Swanke on the left side and Greg Koch on the right.

Improvement of the defense from last in the league in 1983 to sixteenth was cause for celebration, but there are question marks. The biggest is whether top pass rusher Ezra Johnson can return from his second back surgery in two years. Gregg is hopeful. "I think this time it's corrected," he said. If Johnson can come back 100 percent, Gregg will be able to proceed with plans to move Donnie Humphrey to nose tackle and line up with Johnson. Humphrey and Alphonso Carreker across the front, backed by Robert Brown, Bill Neill, and Charles Martin.

Linebacking is the heart of the Green Bay defense. John Anderson, Mike Douglass, Randy Scott, and George Cumby form a quartet that ranks among the best in the league. Anderson was voted the most valuable player on the defense for the third year in a row. Big-pay specialist Douglass led the club in sacks with nine. Scott led the team in tackles and Cumby improved as the season progressed. Rich Wingo is an excellent reserve and Cliff Lewis, Guy Prather, and John Dorsey will be joined by fifth-round rookie Brian Noble of Arizona State for backup competition.

The coaching of Ken Riley was credited for the substantial improvement in the Packer secondary, where a more aggressive attitude dominated. "When we first got here, this was one area I was really concerned about," said Gregg. Cornerbacks Mark Lee and Tim Lewis were solid and rookie Tom Flynn sparked at free safety by leading the NFC in interceptions with nine. Mark Murphy emerged at strong safety. Estus Hood, Gary Hayes, Daryl Jones, and Mike McLeod are backups. The premature release of Jan Stenerud haunted the Packers for the first half of the season. After free agent Al Del Greco took over the place kicking chore from the injured Eddie Garcia in game nine, the Packer fortunes improved perceptibly. Del Greco made nine of 12 field goals. Bucky Scribner was third in NFC punting, and the coverage teams were outstanding. The Packers led the league in kickoff coverage and finished sixth in punt coverage. Del Rodgers was more than adequate returning kickoffs, but the club needs better punt-return people.

TAMPA BAY BUCCANEERS

When new Tampa Bay coach Leeman Bennett talks about the Buccaneers, he sounds refreshingly candid and even objective. New coaches can afford such perspective because they really aren't taking about their team. When Bennett mentions the Buccaneers in a position-by-position breakdown, the word "upgrade" creeps into his conversation at nearly every turn.

Bennett even allows the observation that the legendary Lee Roy Selmon, cornerstone of the franchise and future Hall of Famer, has aged some. While this obvious admission to the laws of nature might seem like heresy in Tampa, Bennett goes even further in his assessment of the Bucs' defensive line. "We have to start thinking of bringing some young defensive linemen along," he said. In the first round of the draft, the Bucs started doing just that by taking Washington defensive end Ron Holmes. Although Holmes is slated for the left side opposite Selmon, the stage is set for change. The second draft choice, Baylor's Ervin Rand'e, is penciled into the notes of most scouts as a defensive end, nose tackle or inside linebacker.

Change is mandatory as well as inevitable because the Bucs were 20th in defense last season and 10th in offense. That is no way to perpetuate a reputation for great defense. "I don't see any segment of the defense that could not use some help," said Bennett. Still, he appreciates the expectations of the faithful who have seen better times than the last two seasons, when the club won only eight games. "I expect us to be able to compete for the championship of our division this year, a division that I regard as strong and balanced," said Bennett.

On offense, Tampa Bay has a weapon that can unbalance things by himself. James Wilder is called a running back by trade. By performance, he is simply a franchise. The Bears' Walter Payton is the sport's all-time runner and the Rams' Eric Decker is the one-season leading rusher. Wilder may be the best back in the game. Like Payton, he catches and blocks as well as runs. Unlike Payton, he weighs 225 pounds and is only 27 years old. Last year, Wilder carried on 84 percent of Tampa's running plays and fell only three short of the NFL record for catches by a running back with 85. His 492 times running or receiving the ball are by far the NFL single-season record. Only two players in league history (O.J. Simpson in 1975 and Decker in 1984) have had more than the 2,229 yards rushing and receiving Wilder totaled in 1984.

He is an aggressive, straight-ahead runner who can just splatter a defender," said Bennett. "What makes him so special is his completeness as both a receiver and blocker. But Bennett warns, "We can't expect him to play at that pace year after year."

Exactly whom does Wilder block for? Nobody else on the team gained more than 59 yards, and that was by quarterback Steve DeBerg. The Bucs do have more than one running back on the roster, the one who does the most work is called "Lead Dog." He is Adger Armstrong, who leads the way for Wilder.

DeBerg did more than hand off. His emergence as "the most consistent quarterback the Bucs have ever had," according to Bennett, is credited with the transformation of the Bucs from a Doug Williams bomb offense to a bal-control offense that helps its defense. "The thing you like about DeBerg is that he has shown improvement each year," said Bennett. "He is a leader on the field and the kind of quarterback you can win with." DeBerg completed 60 percent of his passes. He completed at least 15 passes for a minimum of 190 yards every time he started. Behind DeBerg, the Bucs have former starter Jack Thompson and second-year prospect Blair Kiel.

DeBerg's pay probably had something to do with the showing of the Buc wide receivers, who enjoyed their best season ever as a unit. Starters Kevin House and Gerald Carter complemented each other short and long, each averaging around 13 yards a catch and grabbing almost as many balls as Wilder. Both scored five touchdowns. Theo Bell and Dwayne Dixon will vie for the third receiver spot. At tight end, Bennett hopes to inspire Jimmie Giles to the heights he enjoyed several years ago. "It will be important to have more than one good tight end," said Bennett. Jerry Bell led the position in catches last year.

Bennett likes the right side of his offensive line with Ron Heller at tackle and Sean Farrel at guard. But the left side is in need of upgrading. Gene Sanders was the primary starter. Kelly Thomas and Ken Kaplan will get a chance this season. At left guard, Steve Courson, Glenn Bynoch, and Rick Mallory will compete. Center Steve Wilson will get a challenge from Randy Grimes.

Selmon led the club in sacks for the eighth time in nine years and was healthy for the entire season in 1984. If Holmes can upgrade the left side of the line, Selmon will make other teams unhealthy. Nose tackle David Logan stretched his starting string to 71 games and led the line in tackles. Last year's starter at left end, John Cannon, is an intense player who improved late in the season.

Any team that loses a Hugh Green is going to feel the effects. The Bucs were without their star right linebacker for eight games after Green was injured in an auto accident. Chris Washington got valuable experience in Green's absence and will battle Keith Browner for the left spot. Inside, starters Jeff Davis and Scot Brantley may be joined again by former insider Cecil Johnson or by rookie Randle.

The upgrading is most urgent in the secondary where the Bucs have three safeties in their ninth or tenth seasons. Beasley, Reece, Mark Colney, and Cedric Brown all are getting up in years. John Holt and Jeremiah Castille are young corners, and the Bucs have youth behind them in second-year man Fred Acorn and fourth-round draft choice Mike Heaven.

Bennett calls the special teams average but they were better than that by Buc standards. Punter Frank Garcia led the NFC with a 42.2-yard average in 1983 and set a Buc record for net average in 1984, proving he could survive five cuts in the league. Place kicker Obed Arri set a club mark by making 19 field goals. His percentage suffered because he did not try a field goal inside 40 yards until the ninth game of the season. Michael Morton led the team in kickoff returns, with a 22-yard average, and Leon Bright led in punt returns, with a 7.5-yard average.

● When John Riggins took his famous snooze under the table during Vice President Bush's address at the annual Washington Press Club black-tie dinner last winter, Washington Redskins' owner Jack Kent Cooke might have been discomfited, but there were consolations. For one thing, the end of Riggins's football career is on the horizon, and while Cook will miss the sight of Riggins thundering over unfortunate cornerbacks and safeties, he is unlikely to miss the unpredictable behavior of his eccentric star. For another thing, there is possible help beyond the same horizon, where the United States Football League is now among sport's more fragile enterprises.

It seems that the year the USFL went into business and raided the 1983 college draft, the Redskins quietly invested a seventh-round draft choice in a North Carolina running back, Kelvin Bryant, who already had signed with the USFL's Stars, then based in Philadelphia. That seventh-round draft assuming the USFL becomes as extinct as the giant lizard fairly soon, may keep the Redskins' trend of frequent victories going for a long time.

When Bryant came out of North Carolina, the scouts ranked him just behind Eric Dickerson of Southern Methodist and Curt Warner of Penn State as a running back with enormous pro potential. Dickerson went on to turn around the Los Angeles Rams franchise; Warner became the catalyst for the Seattle Seahawks' "Ground Chuck" offense under head coach Chuck Knox and the reason for the team's first playoff appearance in its history. Nothing Bryant has done with the Stars indicates that he wouldn't have a career approaching that success if he ever gets into a Redskins' uniform. Coach Joe Gibbs can hardly wait to see

In Buffalo the season-ticket sales slipped badly over the last few years after Knox defected to Seattle and Joe Cribbs to the Birmingham Stallions of the USFL. The Joe Ferguson era is at an end in Buffalo, and now owner Ralph Wilson has 80,000 seats to fill in Rich Stadium. Wilson's deus ex machina could be Jim Kelly, the Houston Gamblers' wonder quarterback the Bills were five minutes away from signing in 1983. Even though the Bills lost Kelly, they retain exclusive NFL rights to the former University of Miami star until draft day 1987. By then, the USFL may be a distant memory.

The Buffalo front office has been eating its heart out since one of its own was party to Kelly's escape to the Gamblers. It happened this way: Pat McGroder, then the team's general manager, had reached the point in negotiations with Kelly's agents where the discussion concerned when the press conference announcing the signing should be held. Just then, McGroder's secretary entered his office and announced that there was a phone call for one of the agents. A.J. Faigin, "A Mr. Bruce Allen is calling you," she said. McGroder's face registered shock. Allen, George Allen's son, was then general manager of the Chicago Blitz, which held Kelly's USFL rights. Allen told Faigin that, through Tampa Bay Bandits' owner John Bassett, it had been arranged that Kelly could virtually pick his USFL team. Faigin hung up and re-entered McGroder's office. All commitments were called off and Kelly subsequently signed with the Houston expansion team.

Every time Ralph Wilson turns on his television set, Kelly throws touchdown passes all over his living room rug. It has so frustrated the Bills' owner that he has vowed to sign Kelly if he becomes available again. The breakup of the USFL is about the only thing which would make that possible.

The Philadelphia Eagles are changing their personality to a more defensive-oriented team, and in the last two years they have developed Mark Brown into one of the better pass rushers in the National Conference. But what Marion Camp-bel, the Eagles' defensive-minded head coach, really needs is Reggie White, the top defensive lineman in the '84 draft. White decided to stay down south when he finished at Tennessee and signed with the Memphis Showboats.

The NFL team which would benefit most from a final solution for the USFL troubles is the San Diego Chargers. They could retool their offense and put some gusto into their flabby defense with the talent to which they hold NFL title in the USFL. Here are four players who would make an immediate impact.

Doug Flutie
Herschel Walker
Gary Anderson

1) Gary Anderson—The multitasking running back/receiver for the Tampa Bay Bandits, the ex-Arkansas star could be an updated version of Joe Cribbs.

2) Trumaine Johnson—The Grambling receiver who became one of the first name players to sign with the new league, he excelled for George Allen's Chicago Blitz, then slipped into a nether world with the Arizona team in one of those bizarre USFL moves.

3) Tim Spencer—The former Ohio State power runner, he has traveled the Chicago-Arizona-Memphis route in his three JSFL seasons.

4) Mossy Cade—A former All America cornerback from Texas, he, like Anderson, was a Charger No. 1 draft choice who got away. After long and bitter contract negotiations, Cade opted for Memphis.

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers' fans have never seen a real, major-league passing attack from their team. Under the stewardship of John McKay, the franchise's only head coach until this season, the offense was tailored more to Southern California tailbacks geared to play Oregon State and Stanford. But the Bucs' foremost USFL property is the claim to former Brigham Young All-America Steve Young, the $40-million quarterback. The Bucs, with Young under the direction of new coach Leeman Bennett, a far more inventive man than McKay, would be an interesting team to watch.

Kansas City has had problems developing a running game to complement its passing attack. The problems might be far less serious if Irv Eatman (UCLA), the top young offensive lineman in the USFL, for the Baltimore Stars, became available. The Chiefs also hold NFL title to Mark Adickes (Baylor), probably the premier tackle in the '84 draft and now the property of the Express. Adickes deserves an asterisk, however, because of a knee injury he suffered last year.

The Express, which overspent scandalously and then found itself a ward of the league, signed a platoon of rich talent. In the offensive line with Adickes were center Mike Ruether of Texas and guard Gary Zimmerman of Oregon, considered by many NFL scouts as the best seniors at their positions in '83. Ruether's NFL rights belong to St. Louis. Zimmerman's to the New York Giants, with whom his agent talked before the '84 season. The Giants broke off negotiations when they were not convinced Zimmerman was legally free of his contract.

The Express also has some other interesting talent. Pittsburgh made Indiana receiver Duane Gunn its top pick in the supplemental draft, an honor bestowed upon Express safety Dwight Drain by Buffalo and cornerback Alanda Smith of Texas A&M by Minnesota. Kicker Tony Zendejas of Nevada Reno, was selected by Washington with an eye to making him Mark Moseley's eventual successor.

Some USFL players were selected by NFL teams with the idea of strengthening areas in which they have been tradi-

“I don’t think there’s any way a fan can enter a basketball season without going through Street and Smith’s Basketball Yearbook thoroughly.”

Bob Knight knows basketball. (Some people even think he is basketball.) So when the coach who led the U.S. team to a gold medal at last summer’s Olympics says, “Street and Smith’s basketball publication is without any question or reservation far and away the absolute best there is”—well, it makes our editors proud.

Why not? After all, they put together “the bible.” And over a million of the faithful (96% male) do read Street and Smith’s Basketball Yearbook thoroughly.

According to a recent reader survey, 99% read half or more of the book. And 71% say they refer to it frequently during the longest season of any major sport.

What an incredibly efficient way to reach men—over and over again. And what men! More than seven out of ten attended or were graduated from college. More than half are professional/managerial or own their own business. The median age is 32. The median household income is $34,400.

17 Reasons Why You Should Buy SHERCO BASEBALL SIMULATION The Best Tabletop Baseball Game Ever!

Recently, Game World magazine rated Sherco "The most fun to play" over all other baseball games (APBA, Stratomatic, Replay, JDK, Statis-Pro, etc.) Here are 17 Reasons why:

- 1. INDIVIDUAL STADIUM CHARTS — One for every major league team. Plus, old parks available (Polo Grounds, Ebbets Field, etc.)
- 2. AUTOMATIC UMPIRE — Rules on disputed and close plays, even ejects players and managers from the game
- 3. WIND FACTOR — Can blow a home run foul, a foul ball fair, a long fly over the wall. Especially important in Candlestick and Wrigley
- 4. ASTRO-TURF RULE — Discover the big difference when playing on turf instead of real grass as infield hits skip through
- 5. 1,000 + COMPUTERIZED PLAYER RATINGS — Complete rosters for every major league team, including players who played in only one game. All offensive and defensive skills rated: innings of effectiveness, walks, strikeouts, E.R.A., batting average, home run power, speed, throwing arm range and much, much more.
- 6. INDIVIDUAL PLAYER POSITIONING — You position the cut outfielders, infielders for pull hitters, bunts, double plays, plays at the plate
- 7. SPECIAL (FREAK) EVENTS — Rainouts, interference plays, rundowns, unusual errors, deflected hits, even power failures in the astrodome
- 8. INJURY CHARTS — Includes all types of injuries for hit batsmen, steal attempts, catches against the wall and even serious injuries (car accidents, poisonings) which may occur after the game is over
- 9. COMPLETE MANAGERIAL CONTROL — Only you decide when to hit & run, stretch a base hit, steal, bunt, pick off, pinch hit, move your fielders in-out-left-right, bring in a reliever, etc.
- 10. STOP-ACTION PLAYING FIELD — A magnificently detailed 18 x 18 composite stadium playing board that looks like a real ballpark. Each square is equal to 15 feet, allowing you to see at all times exactly where the ball is hit or thrown, exactly where a fielder or runner is positioned
- 11. OLD-TIME TEAMS — Pick your favorite era, favorite World Series, or favorite team. More than 100 great teams
- 12. RATING FORMULA —

We tell you exactly how to rate the players in case you want to add rookies, create your own make-believe team, or rate your favorite Little League, high school, college or semi-pro team. With our formula, you never have to spend another penny to buy new season teams

13. MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

— We've been in business since 1968. More than 200,000 customers have purchased our simulation which some call "more realistic and interesting than real baseball." If you're not 100% satisfied, return our game within 10 days after receiving it for a full refund.

14. EASY TO LEARN, FUN TO PLAY

— A two-page sample inning has you playing in minutes. Then, as you start to make managerial decisions, you learn the special rules on how to bunt, steal, hit and run, call for a count pick up, etc.

tionally strong New Orleans, for instance, already linebacker-rich, drafted Vaughn Johnson (North Carolina State), currently a Jacksonville Bull. Denver, always long on pass rushers, chose Georgia's Freddie Gilbert. A New Jersey General. The Rams own the rights to William Fuller, the North Carolina pass rusher who signed with the Baltimore Stars before the NFL draft. Minnesota thought it had helped solve its pass-rush problems by drafting Keith Millard of Washington State in the first round of the '84 draft, but negotiations with Millard were so long and agonizing he finally signed with the Bulls of the USFL. The Vikings have regretted it ever since.

Some USFL stars already have defected to the NFL. Maurice Carthon, Hersche Walker's running mate with the Generals and a more dependable short-yardage specialist than his more celebrated teammate, will be a New York Giant in the 1985 NFL season. Clemson's Kevin Mack, of the Express, has signed an '85 contract to play running back for the Cleveland Browns. Yet another Express player, Lee Williams, the big defensive end whom San Diego made its first selection in the supplemental draft finished the 1984 season with the Chargers.

Probably the most helpful of the defectors is Craig James. Eric Dickerson's former running mate at SMU, James was signed as a sort of trophy by the Washington Federals of the USFL after the San Francisco 49ers indicated they would make him the top pick in their 1983 draft. James was buried under a mountain of poor support in Washington, but when he obtained his release and joined New England, he quickly became one of the Patriots' chief offensive assets.

There are those USFL stars who wish that they could have found the same sort of escape hatch as James did. Among these is Anthony Carter, the former University of Michigan great, who eschewed the NFL to stay in the state where he became famous, signing with the Michigan Panthers. Carter was instrumental in the Panthers' winning the first USFL title, but that team dissolved after last season and suddenly Carter found himself a member of the Oakland Invaders. Since his rights are held by the Miami Dolphins, a team just south of his Riviera Beach, Florida, home, the transfer to Oakland was a shock. It will be a shock to opposing NFL pass defenses too, if Carter is ever inserted in a Dolphin passing attack which already includes Pro Bowlers Mark Clayton and Mark Duper catching Dan Marino's tosses.

For others, a future in the NFL would be somewhat uncertain. Reggie Collier, for instance, is being used as a quarterback by the USFL Orlando Renegades (formerly the Federals). It's almost certain the Dallas Cowboys, who own his NFL rights, will try to make a receiver or running back out of him.

The future could be more interesting for other, lesser-known USFLers who originally failed to make it in the NFL but developed once they got a chance to play regularly in the new league. Chief among them may be defensive tackle Kit Lathrop of Arizona, who twice was named the USFL's defensive player of the year. Tampa Bay wide receiver Eric Truvillion, a college quarterback, got a quick audition with the New York Jets when he came out of school, then was cut. Given the opportunity to play by the Bandits, he developed into one of the USFL's best pass catchers.

Then there are the NFL defectors, who present opportunities of a different sort for the teams which still retain their rights. Buffalo, for instance, holds the rights to Birmingham Stallions' star Joe Cribbs, but in his absence the Bills found happiness with young Greg Bell of Notre Dame. Considering that the Bills are in a rebuilding period, Cribbs's chief value to them would be as a valuable chip in a trade. Cribbs's Birmingham teammate, Jim Smith, on the other hand, would be welcomed as an important receiver by the Pittsburgh Steelers, considering John Stallworth's advancing age.

Pete Kugler's situation is strange. He developed into a first-rate nose tackle with the San Francisco 49ers in 1983, then jumped to the USFL Stars in order to play in his hometown Philadelphia. But the Stars moved from Philadelphia to Baltimore, disillusioning Kugler. In his absence, the 49ers quickly developed a couple of nose tackles on their Super Bowl champions. If Kugler became available, though, he would be valuable to San Francisco as trade barter, especially since the Philadelphia Eagles could use a nose tackle of his ability.

Dan Ross signed with the USFL Breakers because he wanted to play in his hometown, Boston. But the Breakers moved to New Orleans in '84 and to Portland in '85. Ross still might be welcomed back to Cincinnati. The Bengals made peace with Cris Collinsworth, whose future contract with the Tampa Bay Bandits was voided last year. Coach Sam Wyche, who rebuilt the Bengals into a contender, could use two veterans such as Ross and Collinsworth, to break in a new quarterback, Boomer Esiason.

Since the NFL dropped plans for another supplemental draft in view of the USFL's failure to sign more than a handful of top college players this year, such free-agent stars as Herschel Walker and Doug Flutie of the New Jersey Generals were handled in the regular draft.

BUD GRANT

MINNESOTA VIKINGS

The return of Bud Grant does not necessarily mean the return of the Minnesota Vikings. No one preaches that possibility louder than 'Old Stone Face' himself. With a straight face, Grant predicts his team is "probably looking at three years down the road to get to the upper echelon." It is a startling assessment by a man who never seemed to believe in rebuilding programs, or need them when he dominated the NFC Central Division.

"We are looking to the draft to get us back into business," said Grant. "Patience is a great virtue, and fans and sportswriters need to have it. That doesn't mean we can't be entertaining. But realistically, we can't compete with the top teams this year." Grant no doubt earned from Br'er Rabbit while spending all that time in the woods. His rival coaches know better than to count him out. "I wish he would have stayed on the fishing pond," said Green Bay's Forrest Gregg.

The Vikings got 15 players out of the twelve-round draft, and every one of them has a chance to stick with a club that normally doesn't pay any attention to anyone until his third year. Grant has promised a short training camp, as usual, and he won't terrorize his team with the obstacle course used by one-year coach Les Steckel. "It will still be there but it will look like those old bombers standing along an airstrip," said Grant.

If the Vikings are to take off at all, much depends on the return to health of quarterback Tommy Kramer. When he is right, Kramer is one of the most effective quarterbacks in football. The Bears, for one, are scared to death of him and were fortunate to meet the Vikings twice last season when Kramer was laid up. Kramer missed seven games because of a shoulder injury. Previous problems with a knee injury and with alcohol turned Kramer's career into a questionable proposition. The Vikings tried hard to land quarterback Bernie Kosar, but if Kramer comes back strong, they won't need a rookie. The disturbing thing to the Vikings is that when Kramer did play last year, he was not his usual sharp self. He threw 10 interceptions and nine touchdown passes and completed only 52 percent of his attempts. Wade Wilson ended up starting after veteran Archie Manning took some terrible physical beatings. Sixth-round rookie Steve Bono of UCLA could challenge for a backup position.

If Kramer's injury woes were a problem, they also represented only the tip of the iceberg. The Vikings had 27 players who missed at least one game because of injuries. Wide receiver Sammy White missed three because of a tongue injury. He remains the veteran of a changing corps of wideouts. Leo Lewis was the team's leading receiver, with Mike Jones and Dwight Collins on the opposite side. In fourth-round pick Buster Rhymes of Oklahoma the Vikings have a prospect who could boom or bust. A man of exceptional talent, Rhymes lasted so long because of a questionable college background. But if he decides he wants to be a pro, he has all the tools, starting with size and speed. The Vikings have five candidates at tight end, a position that Joe Senser once owned. Senser is among them, but he missed seven games last season with a foot injury one year after being sidelined by a knee injury. A return to previous form would be a welcome bonus. Steve Jordan led the tight ends in receiving last year and Mike Mularkey caught as many touchdown passes as Jordan (two). Bob Bruer also is in the picture.

When Grant was recently asked why former No. 1 draft choice Darrin Nelson apparently has not reached his potential at running back, Grant quickly answered, "He has played on bad teams." Nelson was the club's third leading rusher last season, behind rookie Alfred Anderson and veteran Ted Brown. With only 80 carries and 27 pass receptions, Nelson handed the ball about half as many times as he did in 1983. That is likely to change.

Only four Vikings started every game last year, and three were in the offensive line, a good sign of stability in a vital area. Tackles Tim Lirwin and Steve Riley and guard Terry Tausch were the corner men. Entering his twelfth season, Riley remains one of the more remarkable physical specimens in the game. Guards Wes Hamilton and Curtis Rouse will have third round pick Tim Long of Memphis State along. At nearly 300 pounds, Long is close to the 318-pound Rouse. At center Ron Sams and Jim Hough will get immediate help from third-round pick Kirk Lowdermilk of Ohio State. Boston College's Mark MacDonald, a fifth rounder, will join Matt Hernandez, Brent Boyd, and Grant Feasel for backup duty.

The Vikings finished 28th in defense last year, a sad commentary on just how far this once proud franchise has slipped. Their first two draft choices, Pitt linebacker Chris Doleman and Acor defensive back Issac Holt should have few problems breaking into the lineup. If Doleman can't play linebacker, he is big enough to help with the pass rush, where Neil Elishire, Doug Martin, and Charlie Johnson toiled and veteran Mark Mulaney licked wounds. Sixth-round choice Tim Newton of Florida is another 300-pounder who could play nose tackle.

The linebacking corps looks deeper than the line, with Doleman and another third-round draft choice, Washington's Tim Meamber, joining Matt Blair, Walker Lee Ashley, Scott Studwell, and Robin Sendlein. Veterans Fred McNeill and Dennis Johnson are former starters at linebacker where competition is bound to bolster production.

If Holt can play cornerback as expected last year's No. 1 pick, Joey Browner, can go to safety to solidify the backfield. Rufus Bess and Willie Feal are experienced corners and Tommy Hannon, John Swain, and Keith Nord provide depth at safety. Fourth-round draft pick Kyle Morrell of BYU will challenge. Some observers predict Morrell will become a fixture like former Viking Paul Krause.

Nelson and Anderson were dangerous kickoff-return men and Nelson is a threat to return every punt he touches all the way. The ageless Jan Stenerud was the No. 1 place-kicker in football as far as average went, hitting 20 of 23. The Vikings' problem was getting across midfield to give Stenerud more chances. Greg Coleman finished near the top of the league in both gross and net punting average, but he got too much work. Viking punt- and kickoff-coverage teams need to tighten up. With all those rookies around, the special teams are bound to improve.

DETROIT LIONS

New Detroit Lions' coach Darryl Rogers said there was a lot about the NFL he didn't know when he left Arizona State. But two things became clear in a hurry: a team can't win without offense, and it's even harder without defense.

"Our biggest question is whether Billy Sims can recover," Rogers said of the running back who is rehabilitating from knee surgery.

But ask Rogers what the Lions need to do to reverse last year's slide from first to fourth in the NFC Central and he will answer: "The first thing is to play better defense than the year before. Then Rogers gets more specific: "We need help in the secondary, linebacking, and the defensive line. That's almost everywhere." But in the draft the Lions took offensive linemen with their first two picks. After the draft they traded quarterback Gary Danielson, who "had his best year ever," said Rogers.

So the bottom line is this: the Lions will have trouble getting off the bottom. They need help in the secondary, linebacking, defensive line, running back, offensive line, and quarterback. And quarterback Joe Ferguson, whom the Lions obtained, thought things were bad in Buffalo. Eric Hipple threw only 38 passes last year because he sat out with a knee injury while Danielson appeared to cement the starting job. Now Ferguson adds to the intrigue. He is coming off an ankle injury and a bruised passing arm that are blamed for his 49 percent completion percentage during his final eight games in Buffalo. Unless Ferguson experiences a rebirth in Detroit, the 28-year-old Hipple seems like the logical choice for a franchise that defies logic.

"I want one quarterback," said Rogers. "I'd love to know who it is after two weeks. But it may take a lot longer." For all anyone knows, Rogers might go whole hog on the rebuilding kick and go with third-year man Mike Machurek or second-year man John Witkowski, both of whom saw brief action in 1984. In his three years of playing, Hipple is only a 50 percent passer who never has thrown more touchdown passes than interceptions.

At least the quarterback has a better chance of staying on his feet with the addition of blockers Lomas Brown of Florida and Kevin Glover of Maryland to a team that finished 24th in protecting the passer. Sims will be happy to have extra blocking, too. Although he is confident his rehabilitation program will enable him to return to form, Sims suffered the kind of injury that ends careers. There is no way of telling whether he can come back or how effective he might be until the regular season, not the preseason, starts. "He won't play until he's healthy," said Rogers.

With former Sims' backup Dexter Bussey retiring, fifth-round draft choice Joe McIntosh of North Carolina State will get plenty of opportunity to make his club as will eighth-rounder Scott Caldwell of Texas-Arlington. Fullback James Jones became the team's most valuable offensive player after Sims was sidelined. Besides his blocking power and running, Jones set a team record with 77 pass receptions. Ken Jenkins, Dave D'Addo and Mike Meade provide depth.

The Lions' receiving is in capable hands. Leonard Thompson is coming off his best season. He enters his eleventh as one of the game's most unsung stars. Young Jeff Chadwick is an excellent possession type complement to Thompson and Mark Nichols as is coming off his best season and showing the promise that made him the club's 1981 No. 1 draft choice. At tight end, last year's top choice, David Lewis, will have to improve to beat out third-year man Rob Rubick, a twelfth rounder. Reese McCall is the third tight end.

On the offensive line, injuries to left tackle Rich Strenger and center Steve Mott prompted Rogers' need for offensive linemen in the draft. If Strenger recuperates from a knee injury, he will compete with Brown on the left side. Keith Dorney is solid on the right and Don Greco and Chris Dieterich are the incumbents at guard. Glover will push Mott, who is recovering from an ankle injury. Don Laster, Larry Lee, Homer Elias, Amos Fowler, and David Jones will fight for backup jobs.

"To be honest with you, defense was a priority in the first two rounds of the draft," said Rogers. "But certain things occur, and you have to do what you have to do."

Two things that occurred were the grabbing of linebackers Chris Doleman and Duane Bickett before the Lions had a chance to pick. So while Brown and Glover will find employment in Detroit without any problem, they can't help a defense that finished 17th in the league. 21st against the pass. Rogers' idea of repair is to take his best defensive player, perennial all-pro tackle Doug English, and change his position. In Rogers' 3-4 system, English will become a nose tackle. This should make opposing offensive guards quite happy and make English quite sad. But Rogers assures, "There's a lot more in the media about Doug English playing nose tackle than there is in Doug English."

To coordinate the defense, Rogers hired former Tampa Bay defensive coach Wayne Fontes, who has the advantage of knowing personnel throughout the division. His reputation as a coach is reflected in the toughness of Tampa Bay's 3-4 defense. Other position switches could include moving Curtis Green from tackle to end and Mike Cofer from end to linebacker. As a linebacker, the mobile 6-4, 245-pound Cofer could become a force. William Gay, a former tackle who didn't play well as a left end, will play right end.

Outside linebacker Garry Cobb is scheduled to move inside next to Ken Fantetti. The team's most valuable defensive player, Jimmy Williams, will move from left to right outside linebacker, providing Cofer can make it at right linebacker and the Lions can afford to keep Cofer from rushing the passer. Nickie, linebacker Roosevelt Barnes and draft choices James Johnson of San Diego State, Kevin Hancock of Baylor, and June James of Texas will compete for playing time.

The Lions want better play out of right cornerback Bruce McNorton and safety William Graham. Rookie Tony Staten and veteran Demetrius Johnson could push. Left corner Bobby Watkins and safety Alvin Hall return.

Eddie Murray's streak of extra points remains alive at 153. He made 20 of 27 field goals. Punter Mike Black could be inspired to improve under his college coach, Rogers. The Lions need considerable improvement in punt and kickoff returns and coverage.

THE APBA PRO LEAGUE FOOTBALL GAME GIVES YOU THE HOME-FIELD ADVANTAGE!

Authentic Pro Action — You are the Coach!

"to the true football...buff, APBA games are little short of Nirvana."

That's what the Wall Street Journal said about APBA a few years ago. And now the APBA Pro League Football Game is a bigger, better game than it was then.

It's been expanded to allow more coaching decisions and options, and the number of possible play results has been greatly increased. Pro football trends and strategies change annually, and APBA has kept pace with them.

IF YOU REALLY KNOW PRO FOOTBALL, THEN THIS IS THE GAME YOU WANT! NO OTHER GAME UNDERSTANDS PRO FOOTBALL LIKE APBA DOES.

You Control All 28 Pro Teams with APBA Football

It's true! You can coach each of the 28 pro league teams in your own home. You get 32 player cards per club—a total of 896 cards in all—and many more are available if you want to expand your rosters.

As coach, you'll choose the starting lineups and make just about all the decisions a real pro coach makes. (In fact, you can be more than merely a coach. You can be a general manager and owner as well. You can make trades. You can even create your own league and draft players from scratch!)

On offense, you'll call the plays. You can select any one of seven basic scrimmage plays (not counting kicking plays, all of which are included in APBA as well), and there is a variety of formations from which to run them. On a limited basis, you may also call certain unorthodox plays, among them a halfback pass, end around and fake kick. At times, you may elect to call an "audible" (a change in the play you originally sent in).

On defense, you can set your unit primarily to stop either a run or a pass, whichever you anticipate. Defensive "situation" substitutions can be important, too. You may insert a fifth (or even a sixth) back when you expect a pass, and you'll want to juggle your linemen and linebackers, depending on the down and the distance to go, because many of them have better ratings against a run than against a pass, or vice versa. You can "key" on a particular ballcarrier or "double-cover" a dangerous receiver. You can blitz and, in short yardage situations, you can stack up in a "goal line defense."

TRUE-TO-LIFE STATISTICS . . .

APBA players will perform realistically in virtually every phase of play. They'll nearly reproduce their actual records in the following statistical categories:

- RUSHING
- PASSING
- PASS RECEIVING
- INTERCEPTIONS
- SACKS
- PLACE KICKING
- PUNTING
- PUNT RETURNS
- KICKOFF RETURNS
- AND MORE!

...BUT APBA IS UNPREDICTABLE

No matter how accurate overall individual and team records are, though, don't think for a moment that APBA Football is routine or predictable. There are simply too many variables. As in on-the-field competition, the outcome of any game can be affected by turnovers, penalties, injuries and just plain luck.

To add to the drama, APBA features an exclusive series of 220 unusual plays. These are perhaps the most exciting aspect of the game. They feature the kinds of plays you see on "highlight" and "folly" films. You'll learn more about them when you get your free brochure.

● The American Football Conference has Dan Marino, Dave Krieg, John Elway, Tony Eason, and Bill Kenney, but bright young quarterbacks are not what dominates the conference. It also has Marcus Allen, Freeman McNeil, Earnest Jackson, Sammy Winder, and Greg Bell, but productive young running backs are not what dominates the AFC.

Coaches dominate the conference whose 1985 championship will be won by a team which is led by a head coach who has won the Super Bowl or by a coach who wins by virtual habit. Of the five AFC playoff teams last year, three were coached by men who had directed their teams into the Super Bowl (Don Shula of Miami, Chuck Noll of Pittsburgh, and Tom Flores of the Los Angeles Raiders), one by a man who produced nine playoff teams in 12 years as a head coach (Chuck Knox of Seattle), and one by a rising star (Dan Reeves of Denver).

You can draft, trade, or do a mixture of both, play with veterans, kids, or a blend; you can emphasize defense, offense, or a balance. But the surest way to succeed is to put your team in the hands of a man who is a proven winner in pro football. It pays off in more than victories, too. The inclusion of a Don Shula or a Chuck Noll on a team's list of assets can increase the worth of a franchise by millions.

Not much should change in 1985. The winningest coaches should win frequently again. The wild-card playoff entrants should be the Steelers and the Raiders. The prediction here is for Miami to avenge last year's defeat by beating San Francisco in Super Bowl XX.

One of the Super Bowl coaches, Noll, is in danger of being outgunned by Cincinnati's Sam Wyche, another coaching comer, who now has rookie receiver Eddie Brown to pair with Cris Collinsworth. The Bengals closed with a rush in '84.

The rest of the AFC coaches, with the exception of one special case—San Diego's Don Coryell, who is attempting to recapture his reputation after two sub-par seasons—are still trying to prove they can win in the National Football League. In some cases, they are trying to prove they can be head coaches in the NFL.

Some of the conference awards should end up this way:

● Most valuable player: Dan Marino. As Marino goes, so go the Dolphins.

● Rushing champion: Freeman McNeil. The Jets will be cautious while Ken O'Brien learns to play quarterback.

● Passing champion: Dan Marino. Enough said.

● Receiving champion: Ozzie Newsome, Cleveland tight end. Whoever plays quarterback, Ozzie is his safe harbor.

● Coach of the year: Sam Wyche, since Noll never gets it.

● Offensive rookie of the year: Ethan Horton, Kansas City back. He fills a desperate need.

● Defensive rookie of the year: Bruce Smith, Buffalo defensive end. Sacks attract attention.

MIAMI DOLPHINS

Shortcomings do not get corrected unless there is an admission that they exist. The Miami Dolphins aren't going to kid anyone about Super Bowl XIX. They admitted their shortcomings on draft day, when they made Florida running back Lorenzo Hampton their No. 1 choice, then followed with four straight defensive selections. The San Francisco 49ers indecently exposed the Dolphins' lack of a balanced offense and shortage of muscle on defense when they drubbed them last Super Sunday. The Dolphins reflected upon the loss and decided to do something about it.

Hampton is not a superstar back, but he is strong, determined, and fights for that extra yardage. He can also catch the ball. Don Shula has built potent running attacks around a lot less "Potent" is the operative word here. The Dolphins' running attack doesn't have to be overwhelming or anything close to that. What Shula seeks is a leavening for the most explosive passing attack in the NFL.

Dan Marino, in his second pro season, was virtually unlawful: an unprecedented 48 touchdown passes, 5,084 yards passing, 362 completions, a 64.2 percent completion average, 9.01-yard average completion, and a league-leading efficiency rating of 108.9. This was from a young player who is likely to become nothing but better. The Super Bowl in which he was under the heaviest pressure of his pro career, was a smudge on his almost-flawless reputation, but correcting that seems more a matter of putting balance into the Miami attack than anything else. "I believe the last Super Bowl is going to make him hungrier to be the quarterback of a championship team this season," says Shula.

Marino throws the ball to a pair of Pro Bowl receivers. "Mark II," Mark Duper and Mark Clayton. Duper roared to a great start, slumped, then finished with a flash, catching 71 passes for 1,306 yards, an 18.4-yard average, and eight touchdowns. Clayton just roared, catching 73 passes for 1,389 yards, a 19.0-yard average, and an NFL record 18 touchdowns. There is one worry: Clayton is a mercurial, temperamental player whose own personality could be his downfall.

Tony Nathan, the veteran back, was a large part of the passing game, with 61 catches for 579 yards. Nat Moore, the veteran, caught 43 passes for six touchdowns in specialty situations. The tight end, a hybrid of Dan Johnson, Bruce Hardy, and Joe Rose, accounted for 74 catches and 10 touchdowns. Johnson could pay far more as the running game becomes more robust, mostly because he's the best blocker of the three. "I think now is the time that his career will take off," says Shula.

Judging solely on the Super Bowl, one might expect that the Dolphins need some sort of shakeup to insure that Marino isn't treated as rudely on a regular basis. But in truth, the Dolphins have one of the better lines. Keeping the defense honest with a running attack should help, too. Jon Gieser has matured into a tackle of first rank. Cleveland Green took over on the other side from Eric Laakso, who missed most of the season due to a knee injury, and played strongly. Guard Ed Newman, the most seasoned lineman and a team leader, made the Pro Bowl, the other guard, Roy Foster, was a Pro Bowl alternate in his first full year as a starter after taking over from Bob Klechenberg, who was finally forced into retirement by a serious eye injury. The top man in the line is Dwight Stephenson, who Shula thinks is the best center in the league. Marino was sacked only 13 times in 16 regular-season games, a statistic he helps himself with because of his quick release.

The running game has some incumbents who can fill in around Hampton. Woody Bennett gained 606 yards and scored seven touchdowns. Nathan had 558 yards in 118 carries and Joe Carter averaged five yards on 100 carries in his rookie season.

One key change in the offense may be in the place-kicking. Jwe von Schamann, long a Dolphin mainstay, connected on only nine field goals in 19 tries and missed four extra points. He didn't kick a field goal beyond 37 yards. He didn't kick very well in 1983, either. As a remedy, Miami drafted Fuad Reveiz of Tennessee. Plunter Reggie Roby was all pro, but Shula was openly critical of his failures in the Super Bowl.

Defensively the Dolphins began the season impressively enough under new coordinator Chuck Studeny but slumped badly later on. They were caved in by the 49ers. "We need to be better defensively than we were last year in order to win," admits Shula.

The Dolphins could be better in the line merely with more consistency by Doug Betters, a Pro Bowler the season before last, and good health to ends Kim Bokamper and Mike Charles and nose tackle Bob Baumhower. Baumhower's knee injury was especially vexing against Joe Montana, but he had off-season surgery to correct it. Betters had 14 sacks, but Bokamper, Charles, and Baumhower had only nine among them.

The key man in the linebacking unit, the most flawed defensive group, may be Jackie Shipp, who was not a factor as a rookie. Allowed to freelance at the University of Oklahoma, Shipp didn't have a clue about the Dolphins' disciplined defense after they made him their No. 1 draft choice. He needs to be a quick learner now. A.J. Duhe has suffered so many serious injuries the last two years Miami followers are about to write him off. The most consistent veterans Bob Brudzinski, Jay Brophy, is able to handle the tough, heavy-duty stuff inside. Charles Boswer is an accomplished blitzing but his work in other areas falls off. Mark Brown has talent but is not the cerebral player the Dolphin defense requires.

If Don McNeal could stay healthy for a full season the Dolphins would have one of the better sets of cornerbacks, with William Judson on the opposite side. The Blackwoods, Glenn and Lyle, remain among the toughest pair of safeties in the entire league, but now Mike Kozlowski, basically a situation player, may be ready to challenge one of them for a starting job.

The top defensive draftees were Iowa tackle George Little, Northwestern linebacker Alex Moyer, and Texas El Paso defensive back Mike Smith.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS

The Patriots have a lot of good players, a lot of versatility, and a balanced attack. What they don't have is a defined personality. The Patriots, including the front-office strategists, jump on the horse and ride off in all directions.

Once they had a head coach, Ron Erhardt, who was deemed too easygoing, so they fired him. In his place they hired Ron Meyer, who had more nit-picking rules than the swimming pool at a Florida retirement community. Meyer was Mr. Discipline. Unfortunately, he was a so Mr. Hardhead. The Pats fired him in the midst of last season when he created a crisis over football authority. The team was 5-3 then and appeared headed for the playoffs.

In Meyer's place came Raymond Berry, the Hall of Fame pass receiver. Out of football since 1981, Berry is also a coach with a live-and-let-live philosophy. An outspoken born-again Christian, he seems to be putting an enormous amount of faith in both the power of prayer and the notion that God, somehow, is a Patriot fan. His analyses of what went wrong at the end, causing the 9-7 Pats to miss the playoffs, was not very satisfactory to those seeking a more reassuring reason than faith for believing in the team's future.

"I don't have the answers," said Berry.

One place they have to start looking for them is in the protection not afforded Tony Eason, their promising new quarterback. Eason, in his first season as No. 1, finished third in the NFL in efficiency rating, behind the two Super Bowl quarterbacks, San Francisco's Joe Montana and Miami's Dan Marino. His interception ratio, 1.9 percent (8 in 431 passes), was the worst in the league. He threw for 3,228 yards and 23 touchdowns. He also was sacked 35 times in the last five games of the season. In the finale, a 16-10 victory over the Indianapolis Colts, Eason went down seven times. "I finally gave up," admitted Patriots offensive coordinator Lew Erber. "I decided 'we'll just run the ball.'" With a quarterback of Eason's ability in the lineup, the Pats can't go to that strategy very often.

Eason isn't the only high-powered weapon in the passing game. Irving Fryar, the prize of last year's draft, should be sprung on the opposition this year. The ex-Nebraska star was hindered by an early injury last season. Halfback Derrick Ramsey caught 66 passes and scored seven touchdowns. Young Stephen Starr caught 46 passes and scored four touchdowns. Cedric Jones and Clarence Weathers are dangerous. And Stanley Morgan is still around. He represents 38 catches for an 18.7-yard-per-catch average and five touchdowns, but the Pats have to decide whether Morgan and John Hannah, the great guard, are worth the trouble. Morgan has turned off a large segment of the fans and a significant chunk of the Pats with his whining. The front office and coaches have to determine whether his talent is worth it. Hannah has seen so many ups and downs, changes and alterations during his time with the Pats, that he has become a professional skeptic. That can be infectious in the dressing room.

Strategically, there is another crisis. Under Meyer, the Pats became a one-back offense. That one-back right now is Craig James, the ex-SMU star who defected from the USFL to find happiness in the New England backfield. Ironically, he did not become a major factor with the Pats until after Meyer, his college coach, ch was fired in the one-back offense. Two other first-rate runners ride the timber. One of them, Tony Collins, was a Pro Bowler two years ago. The other is tough, short-yardage specialist Mose Talupula. James ran for 790 yards, Collins for 550 and Talupula for 553.

Ostensibly the Pats still have a formidable line with Pro Bowlers such as Hannah and tackle Brian Holoway as well as experienced guard Ron Wooten and tackle Daryn Haley. But everything seemed to sag when center Pete Brock was injured last year. Worried about Brock, the Pats used their No. 1 draft pick to take Trevor Matich of Brigham Young, who protected Robbie Bosco and Steve Young in college. He is big enough to function in a running game.

There were times last season when the defensive line was dismal, but the Pats have a sterling chance to get well in that area. All they have to do is keep nose tackle Lester Williams healthy and get immediate production from rookie Garn Versis of Stanford at defensive end. The other end, Kenneth Sims, hasn't turned out to be the superstar the Pats had hoped, but he's now a decent player.

The linebacking could improve if Clayton Weishuhn comes back from an injury and Johnny Rembert and Brian Ingram develop. Veterans such as Steve Neeson, Larry McGrew, Don Blackman and the blitzing Andre Tippett are solid.

The Pats still haven't replaced Mike Haynes at left cornerback. Ronnie Lippett became the game plan for most opponents, and when Ernest Gibson replaced him, it didn't make much difference. The Pats used two high picks to draft defensive backs—Jim Bowman of Central Michigan and Audrey McMillan of Houston—but most scouts projected both as safeties. It could be that there will be some major juggling before the secondary is settled. Raymond Clayborn is the constant at right corner. Roan and James seems set at strong safety, but Rick Sanford lost his free-safety job to Fred Marion. That could change, or Sanford, who once played corner, could be moved again.

Punter Rich Camarillo played only half the season due to injury, but still managed a 42.1 yard gross average and a 34.7 net. Tony Franklin's career was rejuvenated with the Pats. He connected on 22 of 28 field goals and didn't miss any of his 42 extra points.

CRAIG JAMES

NEW YORK JETS

The Jets continue to be haunted by two names which aren't on their roster. One is Walter Michaels, who has been gone for two years. The other is Dan Marino, who never was there. Michaels, now coach of the USFL New Jersey Generals, took the Jets to within one game of the Super Bowl in 1982, then was forced into resignation. The Jets haven't been within a $45 cab fare of the Super Bowl ever since.

Joe Walton, the man who replaced Michaels, is nearing a crisis in his own career. He threw the Jets off the practice field in a fit of anger during the last week of the season. He insulted them on their final day of the season when they were embarrassed by the Tampa Bay Bandits. Walton then purged his coaching staff, shoving defensive coordinator Joe Gardi into resignation, firing defensive backfield coach Billy Baird and linebacker coach Ralph Baker, and watching offensive line coach Jim Ringo resign when Rich Kotite was pushed ahead of him as offensive coordinator. Walton is trying to find the answer with a platoon of "old-pro" coaches. Bud Carson, fired by Kansas City head coach John Mackovic in training camp last year, is the new defensive coordinator. Bill Austin, pushed out of the Generals' organization by owner Donald Trump, is the new line coach. Dan Radakovich, a talented but individualistic coach, will handle the linebackers. Zeke Bratkowski, who said Frank Kush inhibited his passing strategy in Indianapolis, is the new quarterback coach. It should be an interesting year.

The haunting of Marino has to do with the draft of 1983. The Jets sought a quarterback, along with five other AFC teams that year, and selected Ken O'Brien from little-known California-Davis. Still on the board left for Miami was Marino. The rest, as they say, is history. Except that the Jets are still driven to prove that they didn't make a colossal error when they picked O'Brien over Marino. That's why O'Brien is the anointed starter for 1985. He won just one of five starts last year, while Pat Ryan was 6-5—6-2 before he suffered an injury. But O'Brien's the guy, Walton speaks in terms of two quarterbacks, trying to sound diplomatic, but in the current atmosphere around the Jets he merely comes off sounding indecisive. O'Brien retained the starting job late last season even after Ryan got healthy again and despite the losing. Even Ryan knows O'Brien is No. 1.

The problem for O'Brien is that the Jets seem to have lost their offensive personality. Wesley Walker finished the season deep in the Walton doghouse and was on the trading block during the offseason. Lam Jones never has been a favorite. The leading receiver was Mickey Shuler, the dependable but limited tight end. Since Walton uses the one-back-offense. Glenn Dennison, the ex-Miami tight end whose rookie season was somewhat disappointing, is the likely H-back. O'Brien threw 82 fewer passes than Ryan last year, but Ryan connected for 14 touchdown passes while O'Brien threw only six. It could be that O'Brien will sharpen up this season without the burden of appearing as a defendant in court (as part of the celebrated Mark Gastineau nightclub fracas) as he did last year. The draft brought a new playmate for him in Wisconsin wide receiver Al Toon, a 6-4 track man who is supposed to be able to do all the things Walker didn't do in the last two seasons.

The major part of the offense is running back Freeman McNeil. Even though he battled injuries, McNeil still ran for 1,070 yards and averaged 11.8 yards on his 25 receptions. He was voted the team's most valuable player. It could be that the Jets will use more two-back sets, with tough running, tough blocking Tony Paine as the fullback.

The offensive line, once the Jets' strongest area, still is good, but the left side is somewhat inexperienced with Reggie McElroy at tackle and Stan Waldemore at guard. Jim Sweeney, a college center at Pitt, could become a force at left guard this season. Joe Fields remains among the NFL's best centers, Dan Alexander is an underrated guard, and right tackle Marvin Powell is first-rate.

Defensively, the big news is that the Jets will switch to the 3-4 system this season, with Gastineau, the AFC's premier pass rusher, playing a position similar to that of Miami's A.J. Duhe, part down lineman, part linebacker. Gastineau led the NFL with 22 sacks last year, which was exactly half the Jets' total. Joe Klecko had an assortment of injuries and his days as an end may be over. He played nose tackle in the last Pro Bowl and that may be his position in Carson's revamped defense. Barry Bennett is another possibility at nose tackle, with the disappointing Ron Fautot, a No. 1 pick a year ago, also getting a trial as a combination lineman-linebacker. Marty Lyons appears to be in for the phased-out treatment.

One of the reasons for the switch from the 4-3 is the career-threatening knee injury suffered by middle linebacker Bob Crable. The reoriented defense still has Lance Mehl and Greg Buttle, but both of those veterans must demonstrate to Carson that they have the versatility to make his new system go. Kyle Clifton and John Woodring should bid for work as inside backers.

Any marked improvement in the secondary depends upon the health of Russell Carter, whose rookie season was hexed by injuries. No matter where Carson decides to play Carter—at free safety, strong safety, or cornerback—the youngster has all-pro potential. The other experienced defensive backs are corners Bobby Jackson and Johnny Lynn, strong safeties Kirk Springs and Ken Schroy, and free safety Darro Ray. Harry Hamilton, also hurt as a rookie, could bid for a safety job.

The Jets also selected two highly touted defensive backs this year: Lester Lyles of Virginia and Donnie Eider of Memphis State.

Bobby Humphrey led the AFC in kickoff returns and was a top coverage man. Springs is a skilled return man. Punter Chuck Ramsey will get a heavy challenge following a poor season. Pat Leahy, the long time place-kicker, does a competent job. He connected on 17 of 23 field-goal attempts a year ago.

INDIANAPOLIS COLTS

The scene is a Southern California living room on NFL draft day 1985. The time is 5:45 AM, PST. Duane Bickett sits on a couch with his agent Leigh Steinberg. Bickett, the USC line-backer, holds a phone to his ear, a look of irreversible tragedy on his face.

Friends involved in an auto accident? A death in the family? A tidal wave approaching Santa Monica beach? Bickett mumbles something into the receiver, then hangs up. He holds a hand to his forehead and drops his head on the back of the sofa, unable to speak for long seconds. The tragedy is that Bickett has been drafted in the first round by the Indianapolis Colts even though he has told owner Robert Irsay, personally, that he doesn't want to come.

It's like that with Indy.

This has been an offseason of change with the Colts. Frank Kush, the players' idea of the Wicked Witch of the North, is gone. Rod Dowhower, a respected offensive thinker, was hired in his place as head coach. But the punch line is that Tiger Irsay still runs the team, and that means variations on Bedlam. Don't underestimate the departure of Kush as a factor just by itself in some improvement in the Colts. There was champagne in the weight room the day Kush jumped to the USFL's Arizona Wranglers. Cries of "He's gone! He's gone!" could be heard throughout the facility.

"It will be good to get the chains off and be free," said veteran linebacker Barry Krauss.

Dowhower comes to Indy with a totally different reputation. For one thing, he played or worked under such coaches as Don Coryell, Bill Walsh, and Dick Vermeil. He is schooled in the passing game, and at St. Louis, when he was offensive coordinator, he was largely responsible for the development of Neil Lomax. Kush, on the other hand, knew as much about the pro passing game when he arrived to coach the Colts as he did when he left. Which is to say almost nothing. Just what course Dowhower will take with Indy's passing isn't clear. When Hal Hunter replaced Kush in the last game of the season, Mike Pagel was on the bench and Art Schlichter was the starting quarterback. "I think Mike understands that Schlichter is the Colts' future," said Hunter, whose future with the Colts ended a couple of weeks later.

No one understands clearly just what the future holds, including Page, Schlichter, and even Dowhower. That isn't possible while Tiger Irsay continues to operate a theater of the absurd in the Hoosier Dome. But there was one interesting postseason vignette that suggests Dowhower might have scored a subtle victory in charting the team's course.

"We'll be emphasizing offense in the draft," said Jimmy Irsay, the Colts' GM and Tiger's son. This is how the draft actually went:

1. Bickett, USC linebacker
2. Don Anderson, Purdue defensive back
3. Anthony Young, Temple defensive back
4. Willie Broughton, Miami defensive end

It may have been a case of Dowhower establishing his base of authority, as well as exercising his judgment that the Colts needed to strengthen their all-or-nothing defense in order for him to get some development time with the offense. Maybe if his defense keeps him in most games, steals a few and generally improves, Tiger won't be so quick to pull one of his infamous half-time forays into the locker room to undermine the coach's authority.

The team's greatest offensive strength is its running game, with Curtis Dickey and Randy McMillan. But with Dickey nothing is ever certain. Curtis conducts his own personal soap opera. When his head is screwed on tightly, he is one of the most dangerous players in the NFL, whether running the ball or catching it. Dickey ran on only 131 times for 523 yards. McMillan had 705 yards in 163 carries.

The effectiveness of both suffered when Chris Hinton, a Pro Bowl guard as a rookie, suffered a knee injury. If Hinton's healthy again, he, center Ray Donaldson, and Ron Solt, another second-year guard, give Indy a first-rate interior. The standards drop some at tackle with Ted Peterson and Jim Mills.

Raymond Butler is a competent veteran at wide receiver. He caught 43 passes and scored six touchdowns. Beyond him there is nothing extraordinary. Tracy Porter caught 39 passes and Matt Bowza 22. Starting tight end Tim Sherwin, playing a position which should be a young quarterback's life preserver, caught 11 passes. Page and Schlichter were sacked 51 times last year.

Defensively, the Colts have some talent in the line with Donnell Thompson, a reluctant dragon, and Blaise Winter at ends and Leo Wisniewski, who comes off the injured list at nose tackle. Wisniewski had 7½ sacks, a high number for his position.

Bickett probably will be aimed at Cliff Odom's inside backer job. Krauss had 10 or more tackles in 11 games. Johnnie Cooks, a frequent visitor to Kush's doghouse, can still be a force at outside linebacker and Vernon Maxwell is one of the better blitzers.

The rookie defensive backs have a strong chance to play a lot or even start. The Colts' secondary is not to be confused with the Raiders'. Two rookies, Eugene Daniel and Preston Davis, started at corner last year. Mark Kalfentzis finished the season at strong safety when James Burroughs got hurt. Nesby Glasgow is the free safety.

Raul Alegre, hurt for much of the season, had a big field-goal dip to 11-for-18. Rohn Stark was among the best NFL punters, with a 44.7-yard gross average and 37.2-yard net.

One of Dowhower's principal chores may be to restore the confidence of the younger players. "During Monday films," said Glasgow, "it was more like a Johnny Carson roast than constructive criticism. I understand the tearing-down process, but it has to bottom out. Here it never does."

BUFFALO BILLS

It was the next best thing to winning a football game by forfeit. The Buffalo Bills had the good fortune to finish dead last in the NFL the season before (1) a great pass rusher was available in the annual college draft and (2) Bernie Kosar elected to graduate early from the University of Miami.

The pass rusher is Bruce Smith, who won the Outland Trophy at Virginia Tech as the nation's best lineman last season. To give an idea how much he means to the Bills, consider that Buffalo had the second-worst pass-rush record in the league last year with just 26 sacks in 16 games. Smith alone had 38 sacks in his junior and senior seasons. The Bills moved quickly to make him the first selection in the regular draft and then sign him.

That was normal. The bonus was Kosar's decision to end his college career with two seasons of eligibility remaining. Since he elected to come into the draft not in time for the normal selections, but in the annual supplemental section during the summer, the Bills reaped an enormous dividend by swapping that first pick in the supplemental draft to the Cleveland Browns.

Ordinarily all that's available in the supplemental draft is a pair of soiled sweat socks. But Kosar made this one different. This is what the Bills got for his rights: a first-round draft choice in '85 and another in '86, plus a third-rounder in '85 and a sixth-rounder in '86. The Bills turned the '85 first-round pick into Derrick Burroughs, the best man-to-man coverage cornerback in the draft. The Memphis State star is forecast as an immediate starter for the Bills, who are in urgent need of defensive backs who can cover. The third-round selection received from the Browns was converted into Utah State linebacker Hal Garner, a tall and rangy player who should contend for a starting job immediately.

The draft in general was sort of a get-well day for Buffalo. Nebraska's Mark Traylor, who

6-6 and 270 pounds, was the first pick of the second round. He should bid to start at any of three offensive line positions: center, guard or tackle. Chris Burkett, the lanky Jackson State receiver, was another indirect product of the Kosar deal. The Bills traded down with Cleveland's first-round pick and, as a result, got a second-rounder from Green Bay. That's what they used to take Burkett.

Despite all the reinforcements, Buffalo still needs a quarterback even to be a spoiler in the AFC East. Veteran Joe Ferguson was traded to Detroit, and the man who finished the '84 season as the starter, Joe Dufek, probably will battle with rookie Frank Reich of Maryland to determine who becomes the team's developmental project.

The Bills had a violent post-2-14 shakeup in almost every football department except the one you might expect. Ray Stephenson, the head coach, returns despite owner Ralph Wilson's dallying for weeks with ex-Cleveland coach Sam Rutigliano. Eight of the nine assistant coaches either were fired or left voluntarily. The new guys include Hank Bullough, one of the most respected defensive coordinators in football. He will receive the highest salary ever paid an NFL assistant and has the title of assistant head coach. He was an unsuccessful applicant for the Bills' head job. The Bills brought back Jim Ringo, once their head man, as line coach and offensive coordinator.

Ringo will try to reconstruct a running game around halfback Greg Bell, who was a surprising smash as a rookie, gaining 1,100 yards and scoring seven touchdowns. His 85-yard touchdown run on the first play from scrimmage, the longest run ever against Dallas, keyed a 14-3 upset over the Cowboys, the highlight of the season. Booker Moore, mainly a blocker, is Bell's running mate, but rookie Jacques Robinson of Washington, whose college specialty was bowl-game MVP awards, will play if he can keep his weight down.

The offensive line is experienced, but its forte was finesse and quickness and that's out-of-date now. Muscle is needed. Will Grant is the incumbent center with Jim Ritcher at left guard. Starting right guard John Borchardt was traded to Seattle, so Traynowicz has a natural opening. The tackles are Ken Jones and Joe Devlin.

With Jerry Butler a long shot to return this year from knee surgery in 1983, the emphasis is on young receivers such as Byron Franklin, who just missed the club record with 69 receptions last year. Mitchell Brookins, Burkett rookie Andre Reed of Kutztown State, and Eric Richardson, last year's No. 2 pick who spent the season on injured reserve. Also around is veteran Preston Dennard, who caught seven touchdown passes. Whoever plays quarterback may find his best friend is tight end Tony Hunter, who was inexplicably left out of the offense for a large portion of '84.

If the Bills are to show immediate improvement, it will be on defense under Bullough. If Smith has an immediate impact at end, it could free two former Pro Bowlers, nose tackle Fred Smerlas and left end Ben Williams.

Garner may push outside linebacker Lucious Sanford, who has been bothered by injuries for a couple of seasons. Darryl Talley is the coming star on the other side, with veterans Eugene Marve and Jim Haslett inside.

Burrough should join veteran Charles Romes as starting corners, little Rodney Belinger, injured in his rookie debut last year, is the nickel back. Steve Freeman is the team leader at strong safety, but free safety manned mostly by Donald Wilson in his first pro year, is up in the air.

Buffalo's special teams were a tragedy the last two years, so a dozen or more rookies could make the team in the search for an extra edge. John Kidd had good numbers, a 42-yard average as the rookie punter, but his work tailed off late in the season. Rookie Paul Woodside of West Virginia will challenge place-kicker Chuck Nelson, who joined the Bills in the last month of the season and was unimpressive.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS

Tom Landry must be considered a dispassionate source when it comes to the Western Division of the American Football Conference. Last season, when Denver, the Raiders, and Seattle were battling for the division title, Landry volunteered an opinion: "In that division," said the Dallas coach, "Seattle is the best team." As it turned out, the Broncos defeated the Seahawks in the division showdown. But consider what the Seahawks accomplished in 1984 and their future seems unlimited.

For starters, they lost the outstanding running back, Curt Warner, in the first game of the season. Warner was the principal reason the Seahawks had qualified for their first playoffs in 1983, when he enjoyed a Pro Bowl season in his first year as a professional. In effect, he was the Seahawk running game, and the Seattle offense was, as everyone seemed to know, "Ground Chuck," a phrase which capitalized Chuck Knox's offensive philosophy.

Then, in the fourth game of the season, the Seahawks lost Paul Johns because of a neck injury. Not only was he one of the top young receivers in the AFC, but he ranked among the league's best punt returners.

For all practical purposes, three-quarters of the Seattle attack had been scratched a quarter of the way through the season. But by the time the season was finished, the Seahawks had compiled the best won-lost record in the team's history, a 12-4 mark in the regular season and then a 13-7 victory over the Raiders in the wild-card playoff game. The Seahawks not only established a club standard for points scored in a season (418), they also set a team record for fewest points allowed (282). Their defense, statistically near the bottom of the NFL in 1983, accomplished three shutouts, which equaled the Seattle total for the entire eight previous seasons.

"It's chemistry," explained Reggie McKenzie, the veteran guard. "It's a nice blend we have here. We have the veterans, we have the young players who are not real experienced but not inexperienced, and we had the rookies who have talent and were learning to play. The chemistry is not about everybody being pals and having a beer together after practice. It's about working together."

Since the Seahawks will have more experience, plus the same chemistry, plus a healthy Warner this season, they could be the best team in the history of the franchise.

Even before the key injuries, the question about the 84 Seahawks was whether inexperienced quarterback Dave Krieg could provide enough balance to the offense to keep opposing defenses from overloading against Warner. What Krieg did to compensate for Warner's absence was astounding, far beyond what even the optimists had hoped for him with Warner in the lineup. He threw for a club-record 3,671 yards and broke the team touchdown pass record by a dozen, throwing for 32 scores. In one game, he passed for five touchdowns against the Detroit Lions. In another game, against San Diego, he completed 20 of 29 passes.

Steve Largent, Krieg's principal collaborator, could do himself in the absence of Johns. He broke his own team record for touchdown passes with 12. In one memorable afternoon against Denver, he caught 12 balls for 191 yards. After Johns was injured, rookie Dary Turner stepped into the Seahawk lineup and caught 35 passes, 10 of which were for touchdowns. His per-catch average of 20.4 yards was the perfect item to stretch the pass defenses and prevent them from overplaying Largent. With Warner gone after his first 10 carries, the entire Seattle offense shifted to the pass. David Hughes, normally a blocker and specialty pass receiver, was the team's leading ground gainer, with 327 yards.

No Seattle team has ever had the offensive balance of this season's squad, with Krieg, Largent, Turner, and Warner—assuming he's healthy again. The offensive line is well-seasoned, with Bar Bush at center, Edwin Bailey and Robert Pratt at guards, and Ron Essink and Bob Cryder at tackles.

The defensive turnaround was almost predictable, considering that Tom Catlin, Knox's top aide, is in charge of the unit. Catlin ranks among the best defensive coordinators in football. The Seahawks led the NFL in takeaways with 63, the second best in NFL history. They also led the NFL with 38 interceptions, the highest figure in the league in 24 years. A third league-leading figure, 25 fumble recoveries, was a symbol of the aggressive opportunistic Catlin style. Seattle led the NFL in takeovers-turnover ratio (+24).

The Seahawks have developed into one of the league's fiercest pass-rush teams. They sacked the opposing quarterbacks 55 times last year. Jeff Bryant and Jacob Green, the ends, were the team leaders, with 14½ and 13 sacks, respectively. Nose tackle Joe Nash and veteran Mike Fanning, the man Catlin inserts when he uses a four-man rush, added seven each. Nash was an outstanding story in 84. One of the top overachievers in the NFL, the free agent from Boston College was named to the Pro Bowl.

Safety Kenny Easley was a popular choice for AFC defensive player of the year. He intercepted 10 passes, two of which he returned for touchdowns. But he cannot be gauged on the usual defensive statistics, such as interceptions. He is a fearsome player, one who tightropes the chalk line of legitimacy at times. Even the Raiders concede he is a "Raider type" who often succeeds by intimidation. He also makes the big play.

Easley's colleague in the secondary, Dave Brown, had his finest season in a 10-year career. He intercepted eight passes, tying a league record by returning two for touchdowns in one game against Kansas City. Brown, too, was named to the Pro Bowl. Cornerbacks Terry Taylor and Terry Jackson, along with free safety John Harris, make the secondary stable.

The linebackers Keith Butler, Bruce

Scholtz, Greg Gaines, Shelton Robinson, and Michael Jackson, are not spectacular but they are effective. Robinson tied with Green for the most forced fumbles and led in tackles.

What puts the Seahawks ahead of most of the competition is their special teams, coached by the fiery Rusty Tillman.

"Our kickoff team fires us up every game," says Simpson. "They demolish people out there. We're going to try to take the ball away from you. The special teams will either take it away from you or knock your block off trying. Just watch them fire up the rest of us."

Fredd Young was named to the Pro Bowl in the special-teams designation. He was an example of the Seahawks' efficiency in all special-teams departments. Opposing punt returners averaged a measly 6.4 yards and opposing kickoff returners a spartan 16.7. With Easley replacing Johns, the Seahawks averaged 11 yards per punt return themselves. Place-kicker Norm Johnson, another Pro Bowler, missed just four of 20 field goals. He was 10 of 11 from between the 30 and 49. The defense scored eight touchdowns. The special teams blocked four punts and two field goals which resulted in 27 points.

The man who should take the biggest bow is Knox, who has a special talent for assembling and retaining strong staffs of assistant coaches, keeping his players' outlooks sunny in the face of adversity, and adjusting to the strengths and weakness of his own team.

The nagging things about the Seahawks' immediate future are the uncertainty of Warner's knee and Johns's forced retirement. Knox tried to trade for George Rogers before the draft and, when he couldn't, made Owen Gill, the Iowa running back, his top draftee. It was for insurance.

LOS ANGELES RAIDERS

A Raider executive mused about his team's absence from the last Super Bowl. "Quite a number of our guys decided to take off this season." That observation could serve as a warning to the Raiders' opposition in 1985. Last season's malfunction should not be taken as a sign of terminal decay. Instead, it should be looked upon as temporary woolgathering, a slight detour in the Los Angeles team's resolve. The expectation is that the Raiders will be themselves again this year. That means an expected playoff finish with possibilities of much more.

A glimpse of those possibilities occurred early last December when L.A. visited Miami, the American Conference champ. Dan Marino, the Dolphins' gifted quarterback, threw for 500 yards, yet the Raiders prevailed, 45-34, in that most hostile of arenas, the Orange Bowl. "We needed that one to keep our reputations," admitted Lyle Alzado, the rowdy defensive end.

Now the Raiders need a big, consistent season to polish their reputations once again. They carry the shame of being outroughed 13-7 by the Seattle Seahawks in their only playoff game. L.A. lost its concentration about midseason last year after winning seven of its first eight games. It was about then that the Raiders began believing all those notions about a dynasty, which started after their one-sided victory over the Washington Redskins in the previous Super Bowl. It was during that loss of concentration that the Raiders discovered that reputation doesn't do it on its own. You have to activate that reputation, especially when the division competition includes such toughies as Seattle and Denver.

The Raiders come into 1985 with their reputations intact if somewhat tattered. Consider that five Los Angeles players were starters on the American Conference defensive platoon in the last Pro Bowl: end Howie Long, outside linebacker Rod Martin, cornerbacks Lester Hayes and Mike Hayes, and free safety Vann McElroy. There were three more Pro Bowl starters on offense: running back Marcus Allen, tight end Todd Christensen, and tackle Henry Lawrence.

In assessing the Raiders, one starts with the defense, where the rowdy, bloodthirsty reputation has its base. Los Angeles had more sacks, 64, than any other AFC team. The most visible Raider lineman, Alzado, may also be the most vulnerable. He enters the season, his fifteenth, at the age of 36. The Raider strategists must remember that Ted Hendricks, the great linebacker, wobbled through his final season two years ago as he attempted to squeeze one more year out of an illustrious career. They may not be so patient with Alzado. One reason for that is there is so much talent among the line reserves. Bill Pickens, who comes into the game when the Raiders use a four-man front, led the team with 12½ sacks, 2½ more than Long. Pickens also led the line in tackles, with 82. Greg Townsend and Sean Jones, a rookie last season, have a lot of experience due to the Raiders' strategy of changing defenses from down to down. There would be several applicants for Alzado's job. Nose tackle Reggie Kinlaw is first-rate.

Hendricks' retirement was so ved when the Raiders made a deal for Brad Van Pelt, who starred for the New York Giants for many years. The inside strong man is Matt Miller, who personifies the 'let's-me-and-you-settle-this-outsider' personality of the team more than any Raider. When veteran Bob Nelson was hurt late last season, Jack Squirek, one of the heroes of the Super Bowl victory over the Redskins, moved into the starting lineup. They will battle for the job this year.

The strongest area on the club is the secondary, beyond doubt the best such unit in football. Hayes and Hayes are peerless cornerbacks, the only pair in the NFL who can play man-to-man with consistent excellence. McElroy, a college quarterback, combines brainy play evaluation with a rugged physical style. The strong safety, Mike Davis, would be the star on some other teams.

Only four of 17 opponents scored more than 20 points in a game against the Raiders. The catch was that the Raiders were held to 14 points or less in five games, all losses. That included the playoff game against Seattle. Tom Flores, the coach, will have to come to some sort of conclusion about his quarterback. Neither Marc Wilson nor Jim Plunkett was healthy for the greater portion of the '84 season, which handicapped Flores in arriving at a clear decision last year. If Plunkett can make another one of his comebacks, it will be a true miracle. He will be 38 by the time the playoffs arrive. Wilson finished eleventh in passer ratings among AFC quarterbacks and had the second-highest rate of interceptions, but he did throw 15 touchdown passes. His efficiency should rise as his protection improves. He was sacked 35 times as a part-time starter last year.

Lawrence was the only Raider offensive lineman who wasn't struck down by injury for at least a portion of the season. There's enough experience and depth among guards Curt Marsh, Mickey Marvin, and Charley Hannah, tackles Lawrence Bruce Davis, and Warren Bryant, and centers Dave Dalby and Dwight Wheeler to put together a viable line.

Todd Christensen, the poetic tight end, led the team in pass receptions again, with 80 for 1,007 yards and seven touchdowns, but his long summer holdout was disruptive to a team which seldom gets disrupted. Macom Barnwell had his best year, with 45 catches, but the corner is Duke Williams, whose 23 1-yard average and four touchdowns on 22 catches puts him in position to ease out the 37-year-old Cliff Branch. The Raiders' chief offensive gun remains Marcus Allen, whose 13 rushing touchdowns led the AFC. Allen's 1,168 yards was second-best in the AFC, and the bonus is his pass catching—64 for a robust 118-yard average and another five touchdowns.

The Raider special teams, as usual, are an asset. Williams finished second in the NFL with a 25.9-yard kickoff average. Matt Bahr, dead-end from the 35 and closer, kicked 20 of 27 field goals. Ray Guy, who may have slipped some, is still among the premier punters.

The team's first two draft picks were wide receivers. Florida State's Jesse Hester can catch the deep ball and Tim Moffett of Mississippi will catch it over the middle.

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS

Is there value in carry-over momentum from one season to another? The Chiefs won their last three games in 1984 to finish 8-8, including a sparkling finale in which they routed San Diego, 42-21, in Jack Murphy Stadium. But the momentum will have value only if Bill Kenney stays healthy in '85.

Coming off a 4,000-yard, Pro Bowl season in 1983, Kenney suffered a fractured thumb in the final preseason game last year, and the ensuing surgery caused him to miss the first six games. Later, he reinjured the thumb and also suffered knee and shoulder injuries. Still, he passed for 15 touchdowns and 2,098 yards. In Kenney's absence, Todd Blackledge, the No. 1 draft pick in '83, stepped into the lineup and played reasonably well, as the Chiefs started out 3-3, but then his inexperience weighed upon him.

"I think my injury was the biggest single factor in our team," says Kenney in reflection.

"It hurt our offense because it forced Todd to play, and he wasn't quite ready. And it put a lot of pressure on our defense to make up for it. In this offense, if the quarterback isn't out there making the plays, they aren't going to get made. We had no rhythm."

When whole, Kenney is one of the most formidable passers in the NFL. He has a three-pronged receiving corps: Henry Marshall caught 62 passes for 912 yards and four touchdowns; Carlos Carson had 1,078 yards and a 18.9-yard average on his 57 catches; Stephone Paige caught 30 passes for a 18-yard average. The Chiefs could use an improved tight end. Willie Scott is a journeyman.

The ironic thing about Kenney's injury-plagued season (he struck his thumb on an opposing player's helmet on his follow-through) is that the Chiefs' pass protection, woeful in the past, had a superb record in '84, allowing 33 sacks in 593 passing attempts, the best ratio in the history of the team. spite the good pass-protection record, the offensive line is in various states of repair. Guard Brad Budde is developing into one of the NFL's better men at his position. Both center Bob Rush and guard Tom Condon are aging. So is tackle Matt Herkenhoff, but he's not showing it much. David Lutz, the other starting tackle, had a depressing year because of physical and family problems. John Alt is a huge corner at the position.

The fast finish and the prospects of Kenney's total recovery notwithstanding, the Chiefs are still too much a one-dimensional offense. They got a surprisingly good year out of rookie running back Herman Heard (684 yards in 165 carries), but he's not the sort of back who can carry a complete load. John Mackovic, the head coach, still has to come up with a running game which can give balance to the offense. Ken Lacy, the ex-USFL back, demonstrated that he is strictly a role player, as is short-yardage specialist Billy Jackson. The problem was worsened during the offseason when veteran Theotis Brown suffered a heart attack which probably ended his career.

Defensively, the Chiefs' statistics are deceptive. They finished 24th overall in the NFL and 23rd in pass defense, yet they showed the potential for a formidable future. Most of the showing was in the line, where veteran ends Art Stil and Mike Bell now flank nose tackle Bill Maas. Maas did exactly as he was supposed to do—keeping the blockers honest in order to free Stil and Bell to descend upon the quarterbacks. The result was 50 sacks, a Kansas City record. The figure was attained even though both Maas and Bell suffered late-season injuries. The tough Maas kept playing despite a fracture in his leg. Stil had 14½ sacks and was voted the Chiefs' most valuable player. Bell had 13½ sacks, all in the first dozen games before he injured a knee.

The linebacking is in a state of change. Gary Spani and Jerry Blanton are experienced veterans, but behind them's Scott Radecie, who played much better as a rookie than his poor senior season at Penn State had suggested. Calvin Daniels is solid at one outside spot, but Ken McAulister, a former San Francisco defensive back, and Jeff Paine fight for work on the other side.

The secondary is a contradictory place for K.C. In recent seasons, all-pro Gary Barbaro defected to the USFL and Mackovic traded starting cornerbacks Gary Green, an all-pro, and Eric Harris to the Los Angeles Rams. But capable replacements keep popping up. Deron Cherry, playing Barbaro's free-safety position, went to the Pro Bowl for the second straight year. Albert Lewis, one of the top newcomers in the league, played well in his first season as a starting corner, and Kevin Ross was a rookie surprise at the other side. Lloyd Burruss does well as the strong safety.

The kicking game is strong. Jim Arnold, in his second pro season, led the NFL in gross punting with a 44.9-yard average and finished second in net average with a 3.75 mark. The consistent Nick Lowery connected on 23 of 33 field goals.

The draft brought what may be the needed balance to the Kansas City offense. The Chiefs' first-round pick was Ethan Horton, a back whom scouts often compare to Calvin Hill, the one-time Cowboys' star. Horton, who went to North Carolina as a quarterback, is a big, punishing runner who bangs away at a defense and finally forces it to budge. He is also an excellent pass catcher, which will come in handy in the K.C. offense, and he blocks. At 6-foot-3 and 230 pounds, he's a load. Jon Hayes of Iowa was the second draft pick, and he was the highest-rated tight end available. Could be that he will move right into the lineup.

DENVER BRONCOS

In a way, Dan Reeves and John Elway were like a young father and his son, growing up together. Except that this was growing in a professional sense. Reeves, the Broncos third-year coach, was impatient and far too demanding during Elway's rookie year. His handling of the wunderkind quarterback contributed greatly to the Broncos' disappointing season. Reeves was widely criticized for it.

But the coach took the criticism to heart. He didn't resent it; he learned from it. Consequently, his handling of Elway in the quarterback's second pro season was one of the major reasons the Broncos slipped past Seattle and the Raiders to win the championship of the AFC West. Probably the most effective move Reeves made was the trade of Steve DeBerg, Elway's chief rival to Tampa Bay before the season began. "That wiped the slate clean," says wide receiver Steve Watson. "That told us Elway is our quarterback and that's the way it's going to be."

That's the way it was. Now it's time to see what happens when Elway is unleashed in the manner of Dan Marino, Dave Kreg, and some of the other productive quarterbacks in the conference.

I have absolute confidence that we can throw 40 times a game against any defense we come up against," says Watson. "We have the quarterback to do it, and with me [Butch Johnson], and Clint [Sampson]. I think we've got the receivers to do it. I know we could control the ball with the passing game, and I think we'd score more points doing it."

Elway threw the ball 100 fewer times than Kreg last year, 127 fewer than Dan Fouts of San Diego, and 184 fewer than Marino of Miami. Part of it was due to the relative success of the running game. Sammy Winder ran the ball as much as anyone in the AFC and finished with 1,153 yards. That seemed to appeal to Reeves's conservative streak. But Winder was the only back among the AFC's top 10 rushers to average less than four yards a carry. He is a bang-bang type runner. His longest run was just 24 yards, shortest also among the league's top 10. He scored just four touchdowns.

So the invitation seems obvious, open up the attack. It worked when the Broncos went into the hostile Kingdome and upset Seattle 31-14, to win the division title. Elway threw a 73-yard pass to Watson on the game's third play and the Broncos were winning. It didn't work against Pittsburgh, when the Steeler blitzers came out of the woodwork to harass the injured Elway in the playoffs.

Elway, when healthy, is among the NFL's most mobile quarterbacks, and the Broncos' protection aided by that mobility, is getting better. Elway was sacked just 24 times. Now Reeves and his offensive coaches have to find a way to seal off the quarterback from those Steeler-type blitzes if they are to dilute Elway's role.

Watson is still among the premier receivers. He caught 69 passes for 1,170 yards, seven touchdowns, and a 17-yard average. Johnson, who arrived via Houston and Dallas, caught 42 for six touchdowns, and Winder added 44.

The most intriguing new weapon is running back Gerald Wilhite, whose 4.8-yard average on 77 carries was the highest in team history.

Will he stay healthy at last and he showed Reeves some enormous possibilities. For instance, his 27 catches averaged 11 yards, unusually high for a back. He also averaged 10 yards on 20 punt returns and 27.3 yards on four kickoff returns. He is the most interesting Bronco to watch in '85—as de from E way.

The offensive line is a nice blend of the experienced, the young, and the aged, with Billy Bryan at center, Paul Howard and Mark Cooper at guard, and Ken Lanier and Dave Studdard at tackle. Clarence Kay, Jim Wright, and John Sawyer are tight ends or H backs.

Rick Karris had some traumatic experiences when important field goal attempts hit the crossbar, but overall, he was 21 of 28 and his career percentage with Denver is .803.

The story of 1984, for the most part, was defense and the strategies used by Joe Collier, one of the NFL's ranking defensive gurus. The Broncos allowed the fewest points in the AFC (241) and the fewest touchdowns (26). They allowed less than 100 yards rushing in 11 games, including the season's final five. Denver reassumed its reputation as a quarterback-hounding team, setting a club mark with 57 sacks. Ruon Jones established an individual record with 11 sacks.

Collier's use of personnel is illustrated by these statistics: sixteen Broncos recorded sacks, 17 recovered fumbles, 13 shared the team's 31 interceptions. Seven touchdowns were scored by defensive players and turnovers set up 140 Denver points. Only one player, cornerback Louie Wright, was named to a major all-pro team and none was named to the Pro Bowl. That enraged the Broncos, but it served as sort of a left-handed compliment to Collier.

There may be some movement in the Broncos' defense this year. Left end Barney Chavous, 34 and in his thirteenth season, may be challenged by Andre Townsend, who had five sacks as a rookie last year. Chavous had 6½, however. Jones and Rubin Carter comprise the rest of the line starters.

Someone in the linebacking unit may have to move over for Ricky Hunley this year. One of Cincinnati's first-round draft choices last year, Hunley ended up with the Broncos in a midseason trade after his negotiations with the Bengals reached an impasse. He's a quality talent. The man who moves may not be the oldest. Tom Jackson, 34, had a spectacular season in '84. The other linebacking starters are Rick Dennison and Steve Busckinside, with Jim Ryan playing opposite Jackson outside. Karl Mecklenburg had seven sacks and two interceptions in relief.

Wright and Mike Hardén are the mainstays at corner. Dennis Smith may be about ready to move into the Kenny Easley class at strong safety. Free safety Steve Foley tied with Hardén for the interception lead, with six. Randy Robbins played well as a rookie defensive back in specially situations.

The draft was designed to help E way. The top pick was Oklahoma halfback Steve Sewell, who's known more for his receiving than his ball-carrying. The second pick, track star Vance Johnson of Arizona, can get under any long ball Elway is likely to throw.

SAN DIEGO CHARGERS

It's a major league irony that in the season in which the Chargers changed ownership, Don Coryell is where he found himself when he first took over this team, in the fifth game of the 1978 season. Coryell, who replaced Tommy Prothro that year, won seven of his last eight and the Chargers were on the move. He may find that kind of resurgence beyond him now, considering the Chargers' personnel problems and the strength of the AFC West.

There were rumors toward the end of the '84 season that Coryell might be fired, but he weathered the problems. Alex Spanos, the new majority owner, is likely to grant Coryell general manager Johnny Sanders and assistant GM Tank Younger—all holdovers from the Gene Klein administration—a season in which to straighten out the situation.

It won't be simple. Start with the serious knee injury to tight end Kellen Winslow, one of the foremost offensive forces in football. Winslow's career is threatened. Then there is the increasing instance of injuries suffered by Dan Fouts, the admirable quarterback. Fouts passed for 3,740 yards and 19 touchdowns, but Air Coryell now serves shorter routes in order to give Fouts the time he needs but can't always get from his aging and deteriorating offensive line. An illustration of how important Fouts remains to the Chargers came in the final game of the season, against Kansas City, when the veteran quarterback was injured and couldn't play. His teammates staged a spiritual no show. The Chiefs had the game won in the first quarter. "It was a bad way to end," admitted Coryell after the 42-21 loss. "A damn bad way."

The Chargers and Coryell have had two bad seasons in a row, in fact. In '83 it was 6-10 and last year 7-9. Only a nit-picker would make a case for improvement. "We have to get a few more good people," says Coryell in suggesting a solution. "And the people we have have to get better."

Not easy. The Chargers don't terrify defenses with their weapons any longer. Winslow is a long shot to return. Wes Chandler, frustrated by multiple coverages, has been ineffective, and there was serious trade talk concerning him despite his 52 catches and six touchdowns. Chuck Muncie's career went up in a chemical explosion. Pete Johnson, whose acquisition was a bad idea in the first place, was sent to Miami. James Brooks is in Cincinnati. The one remaining constant is the indestructible wide receiver Charlie Joiner, who led the team with 61 catches. But he is in his seventeenth season and will be 38 in October. And Coryell is still depending on ancients such as Ed White and Doug Wilkerson, both 38, and Don Macek, 36, to keep the pass rushers off Fouts's neck.

There was some good news in the Chargers' offense. The best was Earnest Jackson, a lightly regarded running back who, in Muncie's absence, led the AFC by gaining 1,179 yards in 296 carries as San Diego was forced to shift offensive gears. He scored eight touchdowns. After Winslow was injured, Pete Holohan developed into a factor with 56 catches and another tight end, Eric Sievers, caught 41. Then, in the NFL draft, the Chargers selected an offensive lineman, Jim Lachey of Ohio State. It was the first time they had made an offensive lineman their first selection since 1968, when they took Russ Washington, who starred for a generation.

The Chargers made another interesting pick in the middle rounds: Michigan State place-kicker/punter Ralf Mojsiejenko. Ralf Benirschke, the veteran place-kicker, was 17 for 26 in field goals last season, but his health is a ways a worry. The Chargers had Joe Cooper in camp a year ago, cut him when Benirschke was ready, and then watched as he was picked up by Houston late in the season and kicked 11 of 13 field goals. Incumbent punter Maury Buford averaged 42 yards gross and 35.1 net.

The improvement of the San Diego defense remains a work in progress. The architect, defensive coordinator Tom Bass, considered retirement, then signed a two-year contract extension. The defensive line has received the youth treatment and the linebacking has improved but the secondary still looks as if half the help was recruited from Manpower Inc.

Still, the Chargers keep trying. After Lachey was taken, four of the next five picks were defensive backs. Wayne Davis of Indiana State, Jeff Dae of Louisiana State, John Hendy of Long Beach State, and Terry Lewis of Michigan State. The best of the incumbent starters is Gil Byrd, a cornerback. Danny Walters, once a top prospect, tumbled because of injuries and a drug problem last year. The others are a mixed bag of veterans and cast-offs: Tim Fox, Bob Gregor, Andre Young, Reuben Henderson, Miles McPherson, and Lucious Smith.

It is virtually conceded that Billy Ray Smith is not going to be the superstar the Chargers had hoped, but the inside linebacking combination of Smith and Mike Green has become satisfactory. Linden King is solid outside.

The best hope for the future in the defensive line is Lee Williams, potentially a top player. He joined the Chargers in midseason after his hitch with the Los Angeles Express expired. Williams was a tired player then. He needs a full NFL season for an honest evaluation. Keith Ferguson is the best of the veteran linemen. The Chargers also like Chuck Ehin.

One of the Charger problems has been an inability to restock talent. They have some promising youngsters, but sometimes there is a missing piece, such as the case of Bobby Duckworth, the swift receiver who averaged more than 28 yards on his 25 catches and scored four times. Duckworth lacks dependability. In one game last year, he "celebrated" what he thought was a touchdown by spiking the ball on the 5-yard line. Last season, the Chargers lost a first-round pick, cornerback Mossy Cade, to Memphis of the USFL. The Chargers' future, in fact, may reside in the USFL. They hold title to Tampa Bay running back Gary Anderson, Arizona Wrangler wide receiver Trumane Johnson, Memphis fullback Tim Spencer, and Cade.

SOME OF THE GREATEST THINGS IN AMERICA NEVER CHANGE. SOME DO.

In Ansel Adams' eyes, America's wilderness is its most precious national treasure. Through photography, he immortalized the unspoiled beauty of Mt. McKinley for all to see.

Some things never change.

But one great American tradition has changed. U.S. Savings Bonds. Now Savings Bonds pay higher variable interest rates like money market accounts. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

Just hold Savings Bonds for five years and you get the new variable interest rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That means you can earn a lot more, but never less than 7½%. But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. The interest earned is still exempt from state and local income taxes. Still cost as little as $25. And can be purchased at almost any financial institution. Or easier yet, through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. Buy U.S. Savings Bonds. Like the wilderness, they're another part of our proud heritage.

For the current interest rate and more information, U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower interest.

HALL OF FAME

he pro football Hall of Fame elected five new members this year: O.J. Simpson, Roger Staubach, Joe Namath, Frank Gatski, and Pete Rozelle.

Simpson was admitted in his first year of eligibility following the mandatory five-year waiting period after his retirement in 1979. A 6-1, 212-pound running back, he was a two-time All-America at Southern Cal and the Heisman Trophy winner in 1968. Simpson was the No. 1 pick in the 1969 NFL draft and was used as a runner, receiver, and kickoff-returner by Buffalo's John Rauch. Though he led the team in rushing in each of his first three years, Simpson blossomed in 1972 when Lou Saban, who guided the Bills to AFL championships in 1964-65, returned as coach. He won the first of his four rushing titles in '72, then broke Jim Brown's single-season standard (1,863 yards) with 2,003 yards the following year. In 1974, Simpson produced over 1,000 yards again and made the only playoff appearance of his career—the wild-card Bills lost a first-round contest to the eventual Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers. In 1975, he ran for 1,817 yards, added another 428 yards in receptions, scored 23 touchdowns, and captured his third Player of the Year award. Simpson set the one-game rushing record in '76 when he gained 272 yards against the Detroit Lions on Thanksgiving Day. A knee injury limited him to less than half a season in 1977, and in March of '78 he was traded to the San Francisco 49ers for five draft choices. But a shoulder separation and then further knee problems forced him to the sidelines, and Simpson called it quits in 1979 after 11 seasons and 11,236 rushing yards.

Roger Staubach closed out his 11-year NFL career after the 1979 season. Elected in his first year on the ballot, he joins Simpson as the first Heisman Trophy winners to gain admission to the Hall. Staubach was honored as college football's best player in 1963 while a junior at the U.S. Naval Academy. A 6-3, 202-pound quarterback, he was drafted by the Kansas City Chiefs and the Dallas Cowboys in 1964. After his service commitment was fulfilled, Staubach, 27, joined the Cowboys in 1969. He started only two games in each of his first two years, but then won the No. 1 job in the eighth game of the '71 campaign. The Cowboys did not lose again that year, taking the final seven regular-season games before defeating Minnesota and San Francisco in the playoffs and Miami in the Super Bowl. In his tenure as starting quarterback, Staubach guided Dallas to 85 victories in 115 tries (74%), four NFC titles, and two Super Bowl championships. He completed 1,685 passes in 2,958 attempts (57%) for 22,700 yards and 153 touchdowns. His ability to scramble added 2,264 yards and 20 TDs. Called "the greatest competitor I have ever seen" by Dallas coach Tom Landry, Staubach was at his best when things seemed their worst for his team. The Cowboys' starman staged 23 fourth-quarter come-from-behind victories, more than half of them in the final two minutes of a game.

O.J. SIMPSON

Darryl Horenberg

Another stellar quarterback, Joe Namath, enters the Hall this summer. Called "the greatest athlete I ever coached" by Paul "Bear" Bryant, Namath guided Alabama to three straight bowl appearances and then was selected in the first round of the 1965 draft by the St. Louis Cardinals and the New York Jets. He signed with the Jets for a reported $400,000, at the time the most lucrative contract in football, and that, together with Namath's skills and style, brought added attention and excitement to the AFL and helped lead to the merger with the NFL in 1966. Namath was the league's Rookie of the Year, then passed for over 3,000 yards in his next three seasons, including a record 4,007 yards in 1967. Though he did not miss a game in his first five years, he was later beset by wrist and shoulder injuries and underwent four knee operations. He finished his 13-year career with the Los Angeles Rams in 1977, having completed 1,886 passes in 3,762 attempts for 27,663 yards and 173 touchdowns. For all his accomplishments, Namath will be remembered best for Super Bowl III, in which he publicly guaranteed and then directed a 16-7 victory over the heavily favored Baltimore Colts. More than anything else, that game won acceptance for the AFL. Namath is the first Jet player elected to the Hall, where he joins his former coach, Weeb Ewbank, who was admitted in 1978.

Frank Gatski is the twelfth Cleveland player to be enshrined. He played his collegiate ball at Marshall and finished at Auburn before joining the pro ranks in 1946. As the offensive center, he led the Browns to four All-America Football Conference crowns and three National Football League titles. He spent his last season with the Detroit Lions, who defeated the Browns, 59-14, for the 1957 NFL championship. At 6-3 and 240 pounds, Gatski was a durable performer. He didn't miss a game in his 12-year career.

Pete Rozelle was elected to the Hall of Fame in his 25th year as NFL commissioner. For more on his accomplishments and on the development of the league during his tenure, see page 20.

FRANCO HARRIS

after Payton of the Chicago Bears broke the NFL career rushing record (12,312 yards) on October 7 last year in the sixth game of the season. Established by Jim Brown, who spent nine years with the Cleveland Browns, the mark had stood since 1965.

Payton entered the contest, against the New Orleans Saints, 66 yards shy of Brown. He remained a stride behind by halftime. Then, on the second play from scrimmage after intermission, Payton took a pitchout from quarterback Jim McMahon and ran left behind fullback Matt Suhey for six yards. He finished the game with 154 yards, the 59th time he gained at least 100 yards. That shattered a record he had shared with Brown. Payton concluded the year with 1,684 yards, which raised his total to 13,309 after a decade in Chicago. Brown, however, retains the league's efficiency standard: 5.2 yards per carry (4.4 for Payton).

On his way to the top, Payton first had to pass Franco Harris, in second place with a 325-yard lead at the start of 1984. But Harris, after 12 years in Pittsburgh, ran into a contract disagreement with the Steelers. Signed by Seattle, he gained just 170 yards in eight games before being released by the Seahawks with a grand total of 12,120 yards.

Nine of the game's top 20 rushers were active last season. John Riggins, in his thirteenth year in the NFL, became just the fifth player in league history to reach the 10,000-yard plateau. His 1,239 yards and 14 touchdowns moved him up one notch in the rankings, ahead of Joe Perry, and helped the Redskins to their third straight division title. With 96 TDs, Riggins ranks second to Brown (106).

Tony Dorsett and Earl Campbell each advanced one place on the rushing chart a year ago. Both did so at the expense of Jim Taylor. Dorsett, with 1,189 yards for the Dallas Cowboys in '84, raised his eight-year total to 9,525 yards. He needs just 199 yards to pass Perry for the sixth position. Campbell netted 468 yards in a season spent with the Houston Oilers and the New Orleans Saints. He has 8,764 yards after seven years as a pro.

O. J. Anderson advanced eight places, from nineteenth to eleventh, on the strength of his 1,174-yard effort for the St. Louis Cardinals. With 7,364 yards in just six years, Anderson needs 718 to pass Larry Csonka and crack the top 10 rushing ranks.

While Payton was running into the record book, Charlie Joiner of the San Diego Chargers caught and then passed Charley Taylor to become pro football's leading receiver. Joiner began last season, his sixteenth, in fourth place, with 596 receptions. But he moved ahead of Raymond Berry (631) and Don Maynard (633) during the year and then on November 25, he grabbed six passes against Pittsburgh to surpass Taylor (649). Joiner had 61 receptions for the year, giving him 657 for his career.

Steve Largent of the Seattle Seahawks caught 74 passes last season and advanced 11 places, from twentieth to ninth, in the rankings. With 545 receptions in nine years, Largent needs 23 more to pass Lionel Taylor for eighth place.

Cliff Branch began the 1984 season tied for the No. 18 spot with Boyd Dowler. With 27 catches, Branch, a 12-year veteran with the Raiders, raised his career total to 501, good for thirteenth place.

Harold Carmichael caught a single pass last year, but that was enough to break a fifth-place tie with Fred Biletnikoff. The former Eagle standout retired after 14 NFL campaigns with 590 receptions.

Jan Stenerud joined the Minnesota Vikings last season and converted 20 of 23 field-goal attempts and 30 of 31 extra points for 90 points. That enabled him to pass Lou Groza

(1,608) for second place on the pro football scoring chart. With 1,613 points after 18 years, Stenerud trails only Hall of Famer George Blanda (2,002).

Another veteran, Mark Moseley, advanced one place, past Gino Cappelletti, a year ago. Moseley kicked 24 field goals and added 48 conversions for 120 points for the Washington Redskins. With 1,224 points in 14 seasons, he ranks No. 7.

Ray Wersching led the NFL in scoring in 1984. His 131 points (25 field goals and 56 PATs) helped lead the San Francisco 49ers to a 15-1 record en route to the Super Bowl. He holds the No. 18 spot on the chart, with 832 points, after a dozen years.

Pat Leahy of the New York Jets scored 89 points (17 field goals and 38 PATs) and earned the twentieth ranking. He has 780 points in 11 seasons.

Joe Montana remains the top-ranked quarterback in pro football history. The ex-Notre Dame star was No. 1 after the 1983 season, with an 89.8 rating. Then he completed 279 of 432 passes for 3,630 yards and 28 touchdowns during San Francisco's super season. That earned him a 102.9 rating, tops in the NFC, and improved his overall mark to 92.7 (Hall of Famer Otto Graham is second at 86.6). Montana has completed 1,324 passes in 2,077 attempts (64%) for 15,609 yards and 106 TDs after just six years.

Two Dallas Cowboy quarterbacks flip-flopped positions on the passing chart. Danny White, who shared duties with Gary Hogeboom, slumped somewhat during the year and saw his career rating dip from 84.2 to 82.7. He is No. 4 in the rankings. Former Cowboy leader Roger Staubach, a member of the Hall of Fame class of 1985, is ranked third at 83.4.

There are four other active passers among pro football's all-time top 20: the Cincinnati Bengals' Ken Anderson (82.0), at No. 7; the San Diego Chargers' Dan Fouts (81.2), at No. 8; the Washington Redskins' Joe Theismann (79.0), at No. 11; and the Atlanta Falcons' Steve Bartkowski (75.5), at No. 16.

CINCINNATI BENGALS

When considering the Cincinnati Bengals of 1985, it is a good idea to discard the first five weeks of the 1984 season, when Sam Wyche, the new coach, was analyzing, sorting out, and getting acquainted. A more accurate gauge of what the Bengals could be can be obtained from the last two months of the season, when they played eight games and lost only twice, to Super Bowl champion San Francisco and powerful Seattle.

The conclusion is virtually inescapable: the Bengals are comers. No team ever rebounded from a 0-5 start since 1970, the year the old NFL and the former AFL merged into the new NFL. The Bengals almost did it. It required an upset victory by Pittsburgh over the Raiders in the Los Angeles Coliseum, which the Bengals watched on television after barbecuing Buffalo, 52-21, to eliminate Cincinnati. The expectation in southern Ohio is that the Bengals will turn their superior finish into momentum for 1985.

Reality could intrude upon the expectations. Most of the reality concerns the quarterback position. Wyche has his quarterback of the future in place, young left hander Boomer Esiason. The uncertainty is the identity of the quarterback of the present. Esiason doesn't seem ready at the moment.

The most likely candidate is the greatest quarterback in Bengals' history: Ken Anderson. He is 36 years old and is written off annually, but Anderson was the catalyst for the late-season rally. The Bengals performed best when he was behind the center. Anderson has been cursed by a lot of nagging injuries in the last few years, but he says, "As long as the game is still fun and as long as I feel physically well enough to play and play well, I'll continue to play." Wyche has to prowl the sidelines with his fingers crossed when Anderson is in the game. Ken missed five games and parts of two others last year with back spasms and a shoulder separation. If Cincinnati is to have a happy ending this season, Anderson must remain healthy.

One thing which might help Anderson remain intact is that the Bengals seem to be constructing a workable running game again. They have a young guy named Larry Kinnebrew who appears to be the second coming of Pete Johnson. Kinnebrew is not built quite in the dune buggy image of Johnson, but at 6-foot-1 and 252 pounds, he inflicts pain when opposing players tackle him. In his first NFL start last November, he scored four touchdowns against the Houston Oilers. "He's like Pete," saluted Oiler linebacker Robert Brazile, "because you know he's going to get the ball in a short-yardage situation and he's still tough to stop." It was no coincidence that the Cincinnati offense played its first consistent game of the season that day, winning 31-13.

The Bengals also got a massive lift when the USFL's Tampa Bay Bandits decided that all-star wide receiver Cris Collinsworth was a luxury they couldn't afford. He had been under contract to the Bandits but performed nobly as a lame-duck player. He led the Bengals with 64 catches for 989 yards and six touchdowns and should be more effective than ever now that he is sure of his future.

The question is who will line up opposite Collinsworth now that Isaac Curtis has retired. Among the candidates are Steve Kreder, young Mike Martin, and David Verser, a disappointment since the Bengals chose him No. 1 five years ago. But in the April draft, the Bengals received one of the great bargains in recent years. Eddie Brown, the University of Miami receiver, was generally regarded as one of the top five athletes available. But, unaccountably, 12 teams passed on him in the first round. The Bengals, with the thirteenth pick, moved quickly to take him.

M. L. Harris has been a capable replacement at tight end since Dan Ross defected to the USFL. He caught 48 passes for a 15.8-yard average last year. The Bengals throw to their backs a lot. The Nos. 3 and 4 receivers were running backs Stanford Jennings (35 catches and three touchdowns) and James Brooks (33 catches and two touchdowns) Brooks may be capable of much more now that he has had a year in the Bengals' system.

The Cincinnati line, tutored by Jim McNally, one of the better coaches in the NFL, should be more dominant as the youngsters center Dave Rimington and guard Brian Blados mature. It will be one of the league's biggest, with all-pro Anthony Munoz (278) and Mike Wilson (271) at tackle, Blados (295) and Max Montoya (275), at guard and Rimington (288).

Once the Bengals started winning last year, the 49ers and the Seahawks were the only teams which scored more than 21 points against them in one game. It is a signal that the rebuilt Cincinnati defense is now a factor.

The line's heavily experienced end Eddie Edwards is a big-play specialist. He recovered three fumbles and had nine quarterback sacks. Ross Browner, the other end, had eight sacks and 48 solo tackles. Nose tackle Tim Krumme had an outstanding year, with 57 solo tackles and five sacks. There is depth, too. Pete Koch played little as a rookie last year after being selected in the first round of the draft, but the Bengals think he has a future. Glen Collins is another experienced backup.

There is plenty of experience too in the linebacking. Reggie Williams's ninth season was one of his best. He intercepted two passes, had nine sacks, and led the team in tackles. Jeff Schuh is the other outside backer. Glenn Cameron, who begins his eleventh season, lines up inside with Ron Simpkins.

The Bengals have a number of defensive backs who are just approaching maturation. Safeties Bobby Kemp and Robert Jackson are entering their fifth season, cornerback Ray Horton his third. Backup corner Jimmy Turner also enters his third. The only starting defensive back with much mileage is cornerback Louis Breeden. 32

Cincinnati used its second first-round pick to select Emmanuel King of Alabama, who could turn out to be an A.J. Duhe type of player for them. He can be used as a blitzing linebacker or as a down lineman. The draft also brought a useful linebacker Carl Zander of Tennessee, and one of the nation's top defensive linemen, Tony Degrate of Texas, who probably lasted until the middle rounds due to his lack of height. He's 6-2 but weighs 287 pounds.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS

Make no mistake about it, the only similarity between the defending champions of the AFC Central and those teams which won four Super Bowls is that they all were coached by Chuck Noll. Most of the Super Bowl Steelers are gone now. Terry Bradshaw and Franco Harris were among the last to leave, and the departures were bitter. John Stallworth made a miraculous comeback. Mike Webster remains among the better centers, and Donnie Shell still makes big plays at strong safety. But the Steelers are a C. Noll Production. That's why this team could be even better than the '84 division champions, even though it expects another stiff challenge from Cincinnati.

The changeover at quarterback was remarkable. Noll dealt for Miami's David Wood-ey, who played to the coach's satisfaction until he got hurt early in the year. Then Mark Malone, whose principal distinction for five previous seasons was his facial resemblance to actor Tom Selleck, became the sort of quarterback the Steelers had hoped he would be when they drafted him No. 1 out of Arizona State. Malone started 11 games and threw 16 touchdown passes, but his most significant statistic was the team's won-lost record under his lead, 7-4. Big and strong-armed, Malone needs to make decisions more acutely and to sharpen his passing accuracy. But he dials the right number with his teammates and that should take him far.

Malone was the beneficiary of two dramatic events in the Pittsburgh passing game. Stallworth, held back by injuries the last few years, relocated his prime and had the season of his outstanding career: 80 catches for 1,395 yards and 11 touchdowns. He was voted the team's most valuable player. The other notable occurrence was the emergence of Louis Lipps as the offensive rookie who made the greatest impact with the Steelers since Franco's first year in 1972. Lipps scored 10 touchdowns (one on a 76-yard punt return), caught 45 passes for a 19.1 yard average and led the AFC with 656 punt return yards. He was the AFC's offensive rookie of the year.

Malone was not the only latent developer for the Steelers' attack. Walter Abercrombie finally got it into high gear in the last half of the season, averaging 80 yards rushing in the last five games. The pluggier of the ground game is Frank Pollard, who ran for 851 yards. Rich Erenberg surprised as a rookie and was helpful as a spot player, especially as a pass receiver coming out of the backfield in the manner of Rocky Bleier.

If Bennie Cunningham can avoid injuries, he should reclaim his tight-end spot. The Steelers have the reserve wide receivers to play a number of flood formations, which make use of the skills of Wayne Capers, Weegie Thompson, and Calvin Sweeney.

The offense might not have gone anywhere except that the line suddenly jelled late in the year. That is especially true of guards Craig Wolfley and rookie Terry Long and Tunch Ilkin, an undersized tackle. Webster is the anchor with unheralded Pete Rostovsky trying to beat out veterans Steve August, the ex-Seahawk, and Ray Snell, the ex-Buccaneer

Defensively, the feature is an old Steeler trademark linebackers. Two of them, Robin Cole and Mike Merrweather, made the Pro Bowl. Merrweather had a phenomenal year on the outside. He set a Pittsburgh record with 15 sacks—the backers accounted for half the team's 47 sacks—and led the team in tackles. Cole has found a home at inside linebacker after playing outside for many years. Jack Lambert suffered a toe injury which kept him out of action for most of the season, and the future of the great old pro is uncertain. In his absence, David Little played well. The other outside linebacker is Bryan Hinkle, whose 4.6 speed complements Merrweather.

The Steelers, under new defensive coordinator Tony Dungy, did more blitzing than Noll usually risks, but part of the reason lay in nagging injuries to Keith Willis and Keith Gary, the two down linemen who are the foremost pass rushers. Both had off years. Gary Dunn is one of the NFL's more effective nose tacklers, and Noll, a man stingy with praise, said, "He had a great year." John Goodman is a good all-round end and Edmund Nelson can play any of the three down positions.

There could be some movement in the secondary, although Dwayne Woodruff is considered a solid corner and the safeties, Donnie Shell on the strong side and Eric Williams at free, had solid years. Shell led the team in interceptions once again, with seven. Two of them were in crucial situations in must games against the Raiders and Cleveland. Sam

Washington started at the other corner. He had a very good first half, but then teams began to pick on his one obvious handicap, his lack of height (5-foot-8). Chris Brown may push him in his second pro season.

Gary Anderson missed four of five field goals in the playoffs, but he is amazingly accurate during the regular season. He won the last two AFC scoring championships and had a 24-for-32 field goal record last year. Craig Colquitt averaged 41.2 yards on his 70 punts but Noll wasn't thrilled by his inconsistency.

The Steelers' didn't have a glamorous draft, but it may be a useful one. Darryl Sims, the Wisconsin defensive lineman who was the most valuable player in the Japan Bowl, was the first pick. He was an up-and-down player in college, but Noll has a knack for getting the most out of those. Mark Behning, the Nebraska tackle, should put some belt into the offensive line. LSU safety Liffort Hobley, a Southeast Conference with six interceptions. Two linebackers, Greg Carr of Auburn and Cam Jacobs of Kentucky, are opposites. Carr is very branny and Jacobs is a wild man who must be tamed.

CLEVELAND BROWNS

The Browns discovered early last season that Paul McDonald was not a left-handed Bart Starr, and that contributed to head coach Sam Rutigliano's firing. So now the present seems to be laid out: Gary Danielson, obtained in a trade with Detroit, will be the transitional quarterback for a couple of seasons. But the future belongs to Bernie Kosar, for whom Cleveland paid a bundle in draft choices for the opportunity to select him.

In the meantime, young coach Marty Schottenheimer, who went 4-4 after relieving Rutigliano, will depend on his formidable defense to get him through this season. It's not a bad crutch on which to lean. The Browns finished second in defense in the entire NFL and first in the AFC. It is a lineup loaded with studs. Wisely, the Browns concentrated their ticket marketing on the defense. It allowed the fewest total yards, first downs, passing yards, and touchdowns in the conference. That's where the stars reside.

Left outside linebacker Clay Matthews not only was chosen all-pro, but Schottenheimer also said, "He had the best season I've ever seen a linebacker have." Matthews had 12 sacks, 89 solo tackles, forced three fumbles and recovered one, and knocked down seven passes. Inside linebacker Tom Cousineau was a runner-up in the Pro Bowl voting.

Defensive end Reggie Camp had 14 sacks, the second-highest total in the history of the franchise, and nose tackle Bob Golc, a one-time linebacker, has become one of the most effective players at his position in the League.

Free safety Don Rogers, whom Rutigliano described as "causing receivers to hear a cat sipping milk 70 yards away," was named the NFL's defensive rookie of the year. Frank Minnifield, the corner signed away from the USFL, was named to the all-rookie secondary, along with Rogers. Hanford Dixon, the other corner, led the team by knocking down 22 passes.

One nagging imponderable is how linebacker Chip Banks, twice a Pro Bowler, will accept the fact that Cleveland tried to trade him to Buffalo in the Kosar deal. When Banks balked, the Bills accepted the Browns' first round draft choice in '85 instead.

Keith Baldwin lines up at right end. Eddie Johnson, who led the team in tackles, is the other inside linebacker and Al Gross is the strong safety.

Schottenheimer, who hired seven new coaches, didn't hire some puppet to take over the defense he himself used to run. His nominee is the highly respected Tom Bettis, who ran St. Louis's defense for the previous seven seasons. Schottz's new offensive coordinator is Joe Pendrys, the former head coach of the USFL Pittsburgh Maulers, and the quarterback coach is the freshly retired Greg Landry, who played with Danielson in Detroit and should be an excellent tutor for Kosar.

Pendrys has a huge task in front of him. The Browns scored only 250 points last year. The only high-quality skill player on the roster is Ozzie Newsome, the esteemed tight end who caught 89 passes for 1,001 yards and a pair of touchdowns. McDonald threw for 3,472 yards and 14 touchdowns, but if the Browns thought he had a future, why trade for Danielson and draft Kosar at an enormous price? The incumbent had 23 interceptions a year ago, and his arm is not a strong one.

before suffering a knee injury, is an interesting addition to the running game. If he's right again, he is capable of breaking long runs and piling up big yardage games, something the Browns need. None of the Browns' returning backs is much beyond the acceptable stage. Boyce Green led the team with 673 yards in 202 carries. Aging Mike Pruitt had 506 in 163 and Earnest Byner ran for 426 in 72 carries, a 5.9-yard average, as a rookie. There is another interesting addition, former Clemson star Kevin Mack, who comes to the Browns after a couple of years with the USFL. Los Angeles Express.

Brian Brennan caught 35 passes and scored three touchdowns as a rookie. His receptions were the most for a Cleveland freshman since Paul Warfield, the Hall of Famer, caught 52 in 1964. Still around are Ricky Feacher (22 receptions for a 17.4-yard average) and Willie Adams (21 for 12.4). There is still a need for a game-breaker. Three wide receivers were drafted in the middle and late rounds, but the best possibility may be the second-year man Bruce Davis, who was seven for 170 and two touchdowns as a rookie.

The most alarming statistic for Kosar, whose major flaw is a lack of mobility, may be the 55 sacks surrendered last season. The best young lineman, tackle Cody Risien, is coming off knee surgery. So is sub tackle Bill Contz. Veteran tackle Doug Dieken retired. George Lilja, a castoff center, finished the season as a starting tackle. The guards, one-time all-pro Joe DeLamelleure and Robert Jackson, are solid. But Joe is 34 and Jackson is 32. Center Mike Baab is a stabilizer. Mike Krawiec of Ohio State, drafted in the middle rounds, might figure somewhere.

Place-kicker Matt Bahr had a 24-for-32 field-goal record. Steve Cox had the fifth-best gross average among NFL punters (43.4 yards), but there are too many successful punt returns against the Browns. The opposition averaged 11.4 yards. The kickoff-return coverage is soft, too, and the Browns are in need of return men of their own.

HOUSTON OILERS

The Houston Oilers have tried just about everything to regain their footing in the AFC Central. Now they are going to try to do it without Earl Campbell. Back when the Oilers were winning regularly and serving as the Pittsburgh Steelers' chief competition, their idea of offense was to run Earl off tackle two or three dozen times a game until he either broke some big runs or battered his tacklers into submission. The Houston attack was limited, since Earl's value was almost strictly as a ball carrier. But together with some hell-for-leather defense, it worked more often than not.

Now Earl is gone and the Oilers are still playing a one-note offensive tune. The one note is Warren Moon, the Canadian League exile who struggled in his first season as an NFL quarterback. Moon is a charismatic player, an outstanding leader, and a pretty fair passer. But in 1984 he demonstrated once again that playing quarterback under Canadian rules on a much larger field is nothing like playing quarterback in the NFL. Yet here is what Hugh Campbell, his coach, had to say about Moon as he entered his second season:

"Warren Moon demonstrated he has the combination of ingredients it takes to be a real superstar in the NFL. He has the leadership qualities, intellectual ability, pure passing talent, ability to pass on the run, and, above all, a great competitive instinct."

A real superstar in the NFL? Campbell must have great foresight, because Moon hasn't yet proved that he is a competent NFL starter.

Campbell himself still has plenty to prove. Coach of the five-time champion Edmonton Eskimos in the Canadian League, for whom Moon quarterbacked, Campbell was a huge disappointment in his only season as coach of the USFL Los Angeles Express, then impressed no one in his first year with the Oilers. One of the knocks against the coach is that he is even more laid back than ex-Oiler coach Bum Phillips, and being laid back is supposed to be one of the major reasons why Bum was fired.

The Oilers lost their first 10 games before splitting their final six. Among the optimists, the three late victories are seen as a signal, a final coming together and signal that Campbell and Moon have the team headed in the right direction. The skeptics point out that the wins included triumphs over two struggling teams, the New York Jets and Kansas City Chiefs. Possibly the most disturbing statistic was the margin of loss in each of the team's 13 defeats: 10 points, 14, 17, 32, 17, 10, 18, 13, 18, 28, 17, 9, 7.

The Houston offense scored only 240 points in 11 games, the Oilers scored 17 points or less. In seven games they were held to one touchdown or none. Moon threw for 3,338 yards and a dozen TDs, but his percentage of touchdowns was just 2.7, one of the lowest figures in the league. One of the problems is that the rest of the Houston "skill" players are nobodies. Tim Smith is a competent receiver. He caught 69 passes for 1,141 yards, a 16.5-yard average, and four touchdowns, but he is never mentioned among the NFL's elite. With Campbell gone, the most productive runner is Larry Moriarty, who gained 785 yards, scored six touchdowns, and averaged 4.2 yards a carry. But in truth, he is a mere journeyman.

What the Oilers have is a young, talented offensive line. Mike Munchak made the Pro Bowl as a guard. Bruce Matthews and Harvey Salem are considered potential stars at tackle. Jim Romano, acquired from the Raiders during last season, improves the center position. Dean Steinkuhler, whom the Oilers made the first pick in the 1984 NFL draft, had an immediate impact as a starting guard, but he suffered a knee injury in early November. He is expected to be rehabilitated by opening day. The Oilers may have picked up another stud in this year's draft: Notre Dame's Mike Kelley, who's had some back problems.

Despite all that line talent, Moon was sacked 47 times last year. That's far too much for a quarterback who is supposed to be the team meal ticket. Either Moon and the linemen have to get on the same course or offensive line coach Bill Walsh has to step up his pass-blocking system.

The only Oiler running back with some wiggle is second-year man Willie Joyner. Morarty is a plow-horse type. Butch Woolfolk was acquired from the Giants. Mike Holston, Steve Bryant, Eric Mullins, and Herkie Walls all have one thing in common: they haven't demonstrated they can take the multiple-coverage heat off Smith. Moon found his tight ends and H-backs more often than anything else. Tight end Jamie Williams caught 41 passes and H-back Chris Dressel caught 40.

The most consistent offensive weapon was the kicking of Joe Cooper, picked up during the course of the season. He connected on 11 of 13 field goals and all 13 extra points.

The Oilers finished next-to-last in overall defense and dead last in defense against the run. "We had a lot of guys who would have been in the running for the Lady Byng Trophy if this was hockey," cracked Jerry Glanville, the Oilers' defensive coordinator. The Byng is awarded for gentlemanly play.

Some of the Oiler veterans, such as outside linebacker Robert Brazile and inside backer Gregg Bingham, are playing from memory. Bingham is 34, Brazile 32. The best hope for the future is Robert Abraham, Bingham's partner inside. Avon Riley is the other starter outside. Youngsters Tim Joiner, Johnny Meads and Robert Lyles may get their chance.

The Oilers had only 32 sacks, 11 by defensive end Jesse Baker. Mike Stensrud plays most of the time at nose tackle. Bob Hamm was the other starter at defensive end. In the draft, the Oilers tried to do for their defense what they did for the offense in the last few years. The top pick, Ray Childress, should turn out to be one of the better all-round ends. Not only is he big, 6-6 and 270, but Childress also has a reputation for whistle-to-whistle effort. The second round brought another potential starter, defensive lineman Richard Byrd of Wisconsin.

There are three veterans in the secondary corners: Steve Brown and Willie Tullis and free safety Carter Hartwig. But the most secure may be Keith Bostic, the third-year strong safety. With their second pick in the first round the Oilers grabbed Wisconsin's Lawrence Johnson, who some scouts thought was the best defensive back in the draft.

by RICK MATSUMOTO TORONTO STAR

It's not difficult to diagnose the ailment plaguing the Canadian Football League. All you have to do is take a look at the sagging attendance figures to understand that the league is suffering from a bad case of tarnished image. Not that there's been any scandal, mind you. The league is too staid for that. But what it has failed to do is keep a bright image before the public during a period of tough economic climate and increasing competition for the entertainment dollar in each of the league's nine cities.

For a long time, CFL operators believed that all they had to do was open the doors to their stadiums and enough fans would click through the turnstiles to allow them to at least break even. But that was before the expansion of the National Hockey League into cities like Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, and Vancouver, where football had been the only game in town. It was before the arrival of major-league baseball in Toronto and Montreal. And before the recession of the late 1970s and early '80s that dealt a severe blow to a blue-collar town like Hamilton and the oil-pumping cities of Calgary and Edmonton. It was also before the availability of home-computer games, video recorders, and a general trend towards participating in, rather than simply watching, sporting events.

In short, there were too many reasons for Canadians not to attend a football game, and the CFL failed to provide them with the necessary incentive. As a result, CFL attendance has fallen steadily for the past five years. Last season saw just one team—the Grey Cup champion Winnipeg Blue Bombers—improve its attendance over the previous year. Seven of the nine clubs ended up in the red, with Edmonton and the British Columbia Lions the only moneymakers.

Much of the financial woes have been of the clubs' own making. Witness Toronto, where the Argos gave their long-suffering fans their first Grey Cup title in 31 years in 1983. The Argos management completely failed to take advantage of the surge of emotion that swept the city after the victory in Vancouver. Not a single poster, a piece of stationery, a mug, an ashtray, or even the cover of their '84 media guide and fact book carried a mention that the Argos were Grey Cup champions. They might just as well have finished last again for all the awareness there was of their championship status. As a result, attendance tumbled (by more than 34,500) rather than climbed last season under stiff competition from the baseball Blue Jays, who were hot on the heels of the Detroit Tigers for most of the American League season.

It's been much the same story this winter. While the Jays gained pages of newspaper space and hours of radio and television time with the signing of free-agent relief pitcher Bill Caudill, the acquisition of a second reliever, Gary Lavelle, and the life contract given ace starter Dave Stieb, the Argos hibernated. The biggest news coming out of the Argos offices during the winter months was the signing of quarterback Mark Casale. Mark who? If the Blue Jays prove to be the bona fide World Series contenders that many people believe them to be, then, Argos, look out. There is just a certain amount of entertainment dollars available in the wallets of Toronto fans, and most of them will be spending those hard-earned bucks on Blue Jays games.

Commissioner Doug Mitchell, who'll be entering his second year of office, is well aware of the league's failure to reach out to its audience. But he knows, too, that he can't, for example, force Argos general manager Ralph Sazio to hire a marketing manager so that the team might at least attempt to compete against the Blue Jays' high-powered sales force. Mitchell has, instead, concentrated on selling the league as a whole.

One of the first things he did upon assuming his office was to commission a market research. Then he set out to implement some of the results of the survey. For example, the research showed that many CFL fans, especially in Toronto and Hamilton, were opposed to Sunday afternoon and early evening games during the summer months. Not many were willing to cut short their weekend at the cottage to return to the sweltering city to catch a football game. Thus the league has opted for Thursday night games during July and August in Toronto and Hamilton, along with the usual complement of Friday night games and a few Saturday and Sunday games in cities with less objection to weekend scheduling. Mitchell isn't naive enough to believe that such small measures of switching games to Thursday nights are suddenly going to bring a flood of fans back to the stadiums.

"What we hope to do in '85 is arrest the downward trend which we've seen in the last five years," he said. "It might be overzealous on our part to say that we've bottomed out or are on the way back. But we certainly feel that equaling '84 would be a move in the right direction."

Mitchell has created a number of new departments in the league offices, which recently moved to new headquarters in midtown Toronto. All this has been done in an attempt to give the CFL a more professional and more visible profile.

"I think we've come to the conclusion that our awareness nationwide is not what we hope it will be," he said. "And I hope we've rectified it to a certain extent with the creation of our new departments—our in-house marketing department and our in-house media and public relations department. We want to reach a point where people will walk into a national department store or drug store and see CFL merchandise everywhere or a CFL promotion or contest. If a businessman gets on a plane, we want him to be able to pull out a magazine and read about the CFL."

One thing Mitchell won't want those fans to read about is the number of CFL stars jumping to the National Football League. The biggest name to head south was quarterback Dieter Brock, the two-time Schenley Award winner who fled Hamilton and the CFL's largest contract, at $300,000 (Canadian) a year, to sign a four-year, $2.75 million (U.S.) pact with the Los Angeles Rams. Others who chose the greener American greenbacks included Brock's Hamilton teammate Felix Wright, Winnipeg's Delbert Fowler, Calgary's James West, and British Columbia's Larry Crawford and Mack Moore.

While the USFL no longer appears to pose a threat to the CFL, what that league has done is escalate NFL salaries to such a height that even the lowest paid special teams player in the NFL earns more than most CFL veterans. That is making it increasingly difficult for CFL teams to retain their better athletes. One solution, of course, is for CFL clubs to attract more people into their parks and thus generate the dollars that will prevent the loss of all but the most highly paid superstars to the NFL. But, then, that gets back to the original question of CFL clubs improving their image. And there's doubt that some teams know about the value of a little spit and polish.

WINNIPEG BLUE BOMBERS

(11-4-1) If anyone in the CFL knows about the intricacies of hanging onto the Grey Cup once he's got his hands on it, Blue Bomber head coach Cal Murphy has got to be the one. He's been a member of a championship team in seven of the past eight seasons. He was an assistant in 1977 with the last Montreal Alouette team to win the Grey Cup, and then joined the Edmonton Eskimos the next season just in time to be a part of their historic string of five straight championships. He missed out on a Grey Cup ring in '83, his first as head coach in Winnipeg, but was right back adding to his jewelry collection last year. Despite, or perhaps because of, all that experience, he knows full well that this season won't be without its problems for his defending champion Blue Bombers.

"Any time you win a championship, everything has to go right—no injuries and that sort of thing," Murphy said. "Edmonton was very fortunate when it was running that streak. There was no USFL and no defections except for the usual turnovers each year. Last year we were fortunate in not having a lot of injuries, and we ran into a hot streak at the end of the season. Whether we can repeat this season will depend on those factors and on the number of defections."

Murphy approached training camp uncertain about the status of four of his top players: linebackers Delbert Fowler (West Virginia) and Aaron Brown (Ohio State), defensive back Wyle Turner (Angelo State) and Canadian slotback Rick House. All four had played out their options and were looking to other teams as 1985 employers. The biggest concern would be losing Fowler and Brown.

"Our linebackers were the backbone of our defense," said Murphy. "I'd like to have continuity at that position. Both Fowler and Brown can run and they're big hitters. If we lose them, we might have to change our thinking on our defensive strategy."

Murphy still has a pretty good core of linebackers in Ty Jones (Southern) and Frank Robinson (Tulane), both starters last year, and Canadian Vernon Pahl, a starter in previous years who was shunted to a backup role when the Bombers went to four import linebackers last year. Another returnee is import Del Patterson (Rutgers), who played in three games last year as an injury replacement.

The possible retirement of veteran Canadian nose tackle Doug MacIver has thrown Murphy's defensive line out of kilter too. Stan Mikawos (North Dakota), Brent Racette, and rookie Rob Prodanovic are all possible replacements for MacIver. They're Canadians, too. But if they can't fit the bill, then Murphy will have to go to an import. The leading candidates are Joe Masana (Kansas) and Wat Ceathus (Indiana State).

While Turner could be the only loss from the secondary, the Bombers recruited a number of defensive backs to push the incumbents to greater heights. "And if a rookie beats out a vet, we'll be even stronger," reasons Murphy. The Grey Cup secondary was composed of David Shaw (Prairie View), Donovan Rose (Hampton Institute), Ken Hailey (San Francisco State), Turner, and Canadian rover Scott Fagel. Their competition will include Paul Hammond (Delaware), Kyle Richardson (San Francisco State), Vernon Redd (Hawaii), James Brown (Long Beach State), Lawrence Evans (Mississippi State), and Willie Burnett (Northwest Oklahoma). Canadian Doug Ploen (North Dakota), the son of former Bomber quarterback great Ken Ploen, will compete for the rover job.

Offensively, the Bombers can only get stronger. Now that the Holloway-Barnes combination has been broken up in Toronto, the duo of Tom Clements (Notre Dame) and John Hufnagle (Penn State) is the best one-two punch combining experience and ability. Clements had the best pass completion percentage in the league last year, hitting on 62.5 percent of his 446 throws for 3,845 yards and a league-leading 29 touchdowns. Todd Hons (Arizona State) and Norm Gibbs (Southern) will vie for the third quarterbacking job.

Willard Reaves (Northern Arizona) will be the running back, and that means the Bombers better buy an extra supply of footballs. Reaves, who was a shoo-in as the Schenley Award winner as the CFL's outstanding player, led the league in rushing with 304 carries for 1,733 yards and 14 touchdowns, plus another four TDs scored on pass receptions. After each touchdown he tossed the ball into the area of the stands occupied by the hand-capped, and he vows to carry on that practice this season. Fullback Dan Huciack suffered a broken leg in the western semifinal last year, but Sean Kehoe proved a more than adequate replacement, especially in the Grey Cup game, where he was named the outstanding Canadian player. The battle for the starting job between that pair should prove a dust-raiser.

Jeff Boyd (Chapman College) and James Murphy (Utah State), a pair of speedsters held down the wide receiver jobs, while House and Joe Popawski, both homebrews, worked at slotback. If House does depart, then the Bombers could go to a third import receiver. The top candidates are Don Gatewood (Sacramento State), Keith Johnson (Eastern New Mexico), Dennis Allen (Kansas), and Lawrence Thompson (Miami).

Trevor Kennerd and Bob Cameron will handle the place-kicking and punting, respectively, once again.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LIONS

(12-3-1) The Lions have had the best won-loss record in the CFL over the past two seasons, and much of that success can be directly credited to their stalwart defense, which has led the league in the fewest points surrendered in each of the past two campaigns. But that defense is beginning to crumble through defections to the National Football League or the United States Football League.

If general manager Bob Ackles, new personnel director Bob Vespazani, and head coach Don Matthews don't come up with the right replacements, the Lions could have trouble retaining their position as kings of the Western Division let alone challenging for the first Grey Cup in 21 years. In 1983 they had an 11-5 record and lost the 1983 Grey Cup game to Toronto. Last year, despite an impressive 12-3-1 mark, they didn't even get to the title game because they were upset in the division final by the eventual Cup winners, the Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

The greatest decimation in the Lions' defense has come in the secondary, where the two starting cornerbacks, Kerry Parker and Jo Jo Heath, defected after the '83 season. Now the two safeties, Larry Crawford (Iowa State) and Andre Jones (Nevada Las Vegas), have played out their options and are attempting to catch on with NFL clubs. That leaves only Canadian rover Nelson Martin (Pitt) from the '83 western champions. And you, Darnell Clash (Wyoming) had an excellent rookie year at cornerback and Heath (Pitt) has returned after an unsuccessful year in the USFL. Heath could allow Matthews to move Mel Bryd (Cal Davis) inside to Jones's spot. That leaves only Crawford's position to be filled. But that's a large hole. He's had 17 interceptions in the past two years.

The departure of tackle Mack Moore (Texas A&M) who had nine sacks in '84 creates a weakness in the defensive line. But in Nick Hebler, Rick Klassen, and James "Quick" Parker (Wake Forest) who was named the CFL's outstanding defensive player for the second time in his career, the Lions still have a strong nucleus. Rookie Ed Jimer (North Dakota) was the Lions' first pick in this year's draft but he might not be ready to step in as a starter immediately.

Tyrone Crews (Kansas) anchors the unorthodox linebacking unit. At times, it sees only two linebackers as Matthews switches to his six-man secondary in passing situations.

The Lions' offensive output dropped to fourth-best in the CFL last season, and that undoubtedly is of some concern to Matthews, especially if his defense is allowing more points to be scored.

Matthews' main worry seems to be his receiving corps despite the presence of Swervin Mervyn Fernandez (San Jose State) whose 1,486 yards led all pass catchers last season. Finding three other receivers to complement Fernandez is the coach's consuming concern. Ned Armour (San Diego State), Jim Sandusky (San Diego State), and Henry Vereen (Nevada Las Vegas) were all expected to provide the solution last year, but Matthews didn't seem fully satisfied with any of them. He finally landed the much-traveled Ron Robinson (Utah State) from Montreal, who finished as the Lions' second-best receiver, with 1,010 yards. Armour had 50 receptions but Sandusky and Vereen were disappointments. And unfortunately Matthews' attempt to go with four import receivers resulted in solid Canadian John Pankratz seeing only spot duty until the latter part of the season. It's unlikely Matthews will make that same mistake this year. Pankratz should be a regular.

MERVYN FERNANDEZ
British Columbia

John Henry White (Louisiana Tech), a seven-year veteran, and David Toloumi (Hawaii) provide solid running, but Matthews might look to Keyvan Jenkins (Nevada Las Vegas) who sat out most of last year with an injury, for more speed.

Roy Dewalt (Texas-Arlington) suffered a knee injury late last season, which quite possibly cost the Lions a return trip to the Grey Cup game. But he's recovered fully and should resume his role as the No. 1 quarterback. Second-year man Tim Cowan (Washington) showed why the Lions have been so high on him when he stepped into the breach after Dewalt went down. He could threaten for the top job if Dewalt's knee acts up. Mike Williams (Grambling) and Steve White (East Washington) will compete for the third spot. The Lions' offensive line returns unchanged.

Luis Passaglia, who just keeps getting better, will again handle the punting and place-kicking duties.

EDMONTON Eskimos

(11-4-1) The Hamilton Tiger-Cats certainly pulled off the upset of the 1984 CFL season when they thwarted the Toronto Argonauts' bid for a second straight Grey Cup victory. But the distinction of being the team to splatter the most eggs on the faces of the so-called experts definitely belonged to the Eskimos.

Following the defection of head coach Hugh Campbell to the NFL's Houston Oilers after the '82 season, the Eskimos' reign as CFL champions ended during a turbulent '83 campaign that saw the midseason firing of Campbell's successor Pete Kettela, and the hiring of ex-Eskimo great Jackie Parker as his replacement. Further woes were predicted for last season as star quarterback Warren Moon joined Campbell in Houston and a major house-cleaning plan swept out many of the stalwarts that had brought an unprecedented five straight championships to Edmonton. Most people selected the Eskimos to finish last in the Western Division.

LUIS PASSAGLIA

But, surprise! Parker and his Eskimos ended up in third place in the West with a 9-7 record, the fourth-best in the league. Much of the credit for that success was given to Parker, who restored the easygoing atmosphere that the Eskimos had known under Campbell but which Kettela had replaced with a tougher, more regimented approach.

Sharing the accolades with Parker was second-year quarterback Matt Dunigan. Rather than being the team's Achilles' heel, as many predicted, Dunigan, who had broken many of Terry Bradshaw's records at Louisiana Tech, emerged as the club's leader. Behind the running and passing of Dunigan, a gifted athlete with a reckless bent, the Eskimos had the second-best offensive output in the league, with 464 points. Dunigan himself ran for 732 yards on 89 carries and completed 220 of 412 passes for 3,273 yards and 21 touchdowns. Now with a full year as the team's No. 1 quarterback behind him, Dunigan should be even more poised and dangerous this season. But the Eskimos seemed concerned that Dunigan's unrestrained style could abruptly leave them without a topflight quarterback. Thus they wooed and eventually signed Damon Allen (Cal Fullerton), the younger brother of the Los Angeles Raiders' Marcus Allen. They also added Brad Taylor (Arkansas), who will compete with Kevin Ingram (East Carolina) for the No. 3 job.

Dunigan's main target will once again be Brian Kelly (Washington State), who caught a league-record 18 touchdown passes last season, with all but one being thrown by the young quarterback. In only six seasons, he's become the CFL's ninth-leading receiver and by the end of this season easily should have moved up to seventh. A 1,700-yard effort would put him in sixth place. Chris Woods (Auburn), who took over from the departed Wadde Smith as the other wide receiver, caught only 38 passes but had an eye-opening 22-yard-per-catch average. He will, however, have to hold off the challenges from rookies Mike Miller (Tennessee), who saw brief service with the New York Giants, and Jeff Keller (Washington State). After shipping Tom Scott, the league's all-time reception leader, to Calgary in the trade for linebacker Dan Bass, the Eskimos didn't get as much production as in the past from their inside receivers. There could be a change there with Canadians Marco Cyncar, Brian Fryer (the former Washington Redskins) and 6-foot-9 Dan Runge battling for one slotback position, while the other spot goes to an import, possibly Tag Rome (Northeast Louisiana).

Larry Cowan (Jackson State) took over the running back job from Jim Germany, who was forced into retirement after seven seasons with a badly damaged knee, and finished third in rushing with 759 yards. He'll return as the tailback with veteran Canadian Neil Lumsden, entering his tenth CFL season (sixth with Edmonton), as the fullback. The offensive line returns intact.

Defensively, the changes will continue. Joe Holimon (Arkansas State), a ten-year veteran, and Canadian Tom Towns (eleventh season) are the only remaining members of the '78 team that started the Grey Cup roll. And both may have trouble making the team this year. Another reminder of those Grey Cup years, middle linebacker Dan Kepley (East Carolina), retired this winter and was immediately named an assistant coach. A two-time winner of the Schenley Award as the CFL's top defensive player, Kepley will be missed. However, the Eskimos had the foresight or the good luck to acquire Bass (Michigan State) last year.

STEWART HILL
Edmonton

After going with a 3-4 defense to accommodate both Kepley and Bass as inside linebackers, the Eskimos will likely revert to a 4-3 setup this season. Canadians Frank Balkovec and Mike Robinson (Utah State) will battle for one outside linebacking job, while rookie import John Dailey (Auburn) is being touted for the other side.

The defensive line could also see several new faces. Only rush backer Stewart Hill (Washington), last year's runner-up as rookie of the year, is assured of a starting job. Incumbents Tom Tune (Hawaii) and James Hunter (JSC) will compete with Conrad Coyer (Northeastern) and Lenwood Hamilton (Southern), both of whom saw brief service, and rookie Joe Aguilar (Fullerton State).

At the end of last season the secondary saw Holimon and Darrelle Hall (San Diego State) on the corners with Dale Thompson (Fullerton State) and Cliff Toney (Auburn) the safeties and Laurent Deslaurier the rover. The Eskimos feel that second-year Canadian David Shadrach (SFU) is capable of playing the corner, so he could be the one to bump Holimon.

Seventeen-year veteran David Cutler had one of his poorest years in 1984, but he's expected to return as the place kicker. Rookie Tom Dixon will handle the punting.

CALGARY STAMPED OUT

(6-10) When Earl Lunsford was running the show in Winnipeg, he had the league's best passer, two-time Schenley Award winner Dieter Brock, at the helm of his offense. Before that, there was Don Jonas, also a Schenley winner, calling the offensive signals. Yet the Blue Bombers failed to make it to the Grey Cup game and finally, after the 1982 season, Lunsford was replaced by present general manager Paul Robson.

Now, if it was difficult managing a club with the likes of Brock and Jonas at quarterback, Lunsford, the Stamps' GM, knew he'd have even more trouble keeping the customers happy unless he came up with someone with considerably more talent and experience than the motley collection of signal-callers the Stamps have sent into the huddle the past several seasons. That's why Lunsford, who was one of the league's top running backs with the Stamps during the late '50s and early '60s, took a risk, albeit a calculated one, when he sent two starters to Toronto for the rights to quarterback Joe Barnes (Texas Tech). Defensive end Walter Ballard went to the Argos right away and tackle Jeff Inglis followed as the future consideration.

Barnes, a 10-year CFL veteran, had played out his option with the Argonauts and as of March 1 was free to negotiate with any team in Canada or the U.S. If Barnes had signed with a USFL, and NFL, or even another Canadian club, Lunsford would have had to do some fancy footwork to dodge the bullets that surely would have been fired at him by the media.

"We have to strengthen ourselves by getting older," said Lunsford. "Last year 27 of our 38 players had less than two years' experience. Thirteen were rookies. One area where you can help a young club like ours is to obtain the leadership of a veteran quarterback."

If Lunsford had failed to sign Barnes, it would have been a long summer in southern Alberta. Second-year head coach Steve Buratto, who gave up the general manager's portfolio to Lunsford, would have had to go with Canadian Greg Vavra, who finished last season as the club's No. 1 quarterback, and imports Bernard Quarles (Hawaii) and Danny Barrett (Cincinnati) both going into their third season. Vavra, from the University of Calgary, showed last year that he has the talent to become a starting quarterback, a position dominated by Americans since the CFL gates were opened to imports. Barnes's arrival will now provide Vavra with a valuable tutor and also restore the Stamps to contender status in the West Division. It also allowed Lunsford to trade Quarles to Ottawa.

Lunsford and Buratto also faced the chore of replacing Ballard (Texas El Paso) as well as all-star middle linebacker James West (Texas Southern) and veteran cornerback Ray Odums (Brigham Young), the latter two having played out their options. Lunsford feels former Kansas City Chief James Walker (Kansas State) or Bob Bakemore, a four-year starter at Ole Miss, can replace Ballard on a defensive front four that will return Randy Trautman (Boise State), Ray Wilburn (Illinois State), and Canadian Lylis Woznesensky. Mark Nelson, a five-year veteran from East Oklahoma State, could step into West's spot, but Lunsford has also recruited Junior Tupuola (Washington State), a blitzing-type linebacker who in the Canadian game has come to be known as a rush backer. Tupuola could go to the outside allowing Steve Carpenter (Western Illinois) to compete for an inside linebacking job. Lunsford wasn't concerned about losing Odums, a nine-year veteran. Second-year man Mel Jenkins (Cincinnati) is a capable replacement.

Offensively, the Stamps' receiver corps is still uncertain despite years of tinkering. The team finished last season with Mike Wade (Iowa) and Mike Harper (Southern Cal) as the wide receivers and Tom Scott (Washington) and Rick Massie (Kentucky) as the slotbacks. But the aging Scott, who cost the Stampeders all-star linebacker Dan Bass, didn't respond in the manner he had with the Edmonton Eskimos and he was released at the end of the season. Lonnie Olejniczak (Iowa), a multi-sport all-star, could be Scott's replacement. Running back Rick Wegher (South Dakota State), could also get a look as a receiver if he can't beat out Lewis Walker (Utah) as the club's premier ball carrier. It's unlikely Walker, who gained 732 yards as a rusher and another 595 yards as a receiver, will be pushed.

The Stamps' offensive line will also have a new look with the addition of Canadians Bob Poley and Gerry Horneit, obtained in the trade with Saskatchewan. Calgary grabbed Randy Ambrosie (Manitoba) and Tom Spoletini (Calgary) in the first two rounds of the draft. They'll be joined by Mike Palumbo (Washington State), last year's top choice, who elected to return to school.

J.T. Hay handles the place-kicking and the punting duties now that Mike McTague has been traded to Montreal.

IT'S THE ROUGHRIDERS

(6-9-1) It's rare that a successful act can be reunited after many years of separation and still create the magic it once spun so easily. The Roughriders, however, are taking a gamble that the Jack Gotta-George Brancato combination can regain the touch which produced a Grey Cup for the Ottawa Rough Riders in 1973.

Gotta, who was a television color commentator last year after being fired by the Calgary Stampeders following the '83 season, is the Riders' new head coach, replacing Reuben Berry. And Brancato, who was dismissed as head coach of the Ottawa Rough Riders after a dismal 4-12 record last season, is Gotta's defensive coordinator, just as he was in Ottawa. The new look in the Riders' front office doesn't end there, either. Bill Quinter, a long-time CFL assistant coach and most recently player personnel director with the B.C. Lions, replaces John Herrera as general manager.

The trio is attempting to turn around the fortunes of the Green Machine, which was once the most devastating team in the league but one that has fallen on hard times in recent years. It's been eight years since the Riders last made the playoffs, and there hasn't been a Grey Cup victory parade down the frozen streets of Regina since 1966.

Gotta was far from discouraged by the talent he inherited. "Offensively, we need an instant 'six' guy," he said. Translation: the Riders require a wide receiver capable of outrunning the defense and catching touchdown passes. "And defensively, we're looking for someone who can cover the type of guy which I feel we need on offense."

The Riders finished last season with Stanley Washington (Texas Christian) and Canadian Michael Colleymore as the wide receivers, with veteran Chris DeFrance (Arizona State) and Ray Elgaard, a Saskatchewan native who attended Utah, as the slotbacks. Washington and Colleymore appear in danger of being replaced by one of the newcomers, which include Mike Elarms (Angelo State).

In Gotta's scheme, the quarterbacking picture is also expected to change this season. Joe Paopao (Long Beach State), an eight-year CFL veteran who was the Riders' starter last year after playing out his option in B.C., will go into the season as the backup to third-year man Homer Jordan (Clemson).

"I think we want to swing to a younger guy at this time, and Homer will be given the opportunity to be the guy," said Gotta. "I see it being like the Warren Moon-Tom Wilkinson situation in Edmonton a few years ago. When Moon (now the NFL Houston Oilers) quarterback came in, he was the backup to Wilkinson, the crafty veteran. Gradually it became a 50-50 proposition, and then finally it was Moon with Wilkinson the backup.

"Homer has had the opportunity to learn over the past couple of years. He hasn't been thrown to the wolves. Last year, Saskatchewan was the only team to win a regular season game in the B.C. Dome, and he was the quarterback in that game."

Gotta may also opt for a youth movement on the offensive line, where a trio of youngsters are waiting to step into starting jobs: Mike Angerson (San Diego State), Victor Stevenson (Calgary), and Scott Redl (Saskatchewan). Will be joined by Willie Thomas and Kevin Moile, obtained in a trade with Calgary, to battle Roger Aldag and Lawrie Skolrood.

Defensively, Gotta's quest for speed could create an unemployment situation for Ken Hinton (San Diego State) and Terry Irvin (Jackson State), a pair of 30-year-old cornerbacks. Irvin suffered a knee injury late last season and there's concern whether he'll be able to return at full capacity. Lepolean Ingram (Sacramento State), who came over from Calgary at the start of last season but saw little action because of a knee injury, is a candidate for one corner. At least one other change will occur in the secondary where Ken McEachern retired from his hometown club just one season after demanding and receiving a trade from the Argonauts. His replacement will probably be Glen Sutor (Simon Fraser), Saskatchewan's second-round pick in the '84 draft.

The defensive line will also see some newcomers as Gotta strives for more quickness. Rick Mohr (Cal-Davis), who was an all-star with the Argos in 1983, elected to chase the big bucks in the USFL last spring. But after failing to catch on with the Tampa Bay Bandits and the Oakland Invaders, Mohr wound up in Regina when the Argos shipped him west in a trade for Vince Goldsmith. He didn't have the kind of year with the Riders that he enjoyed as an Argos the previous year, and if he doesn't return to form he could be looking for work again. Rusty Olsen (Washington), another former Argos, could be in trouble, too, as Gotta looks for a greater pass rush. And ditto for Gary Dulin (Nevada Las Vegas), a talented individual obtained from Ottawa who can be an outstanding defensive tackle when the mood strikes him.

Rushbacker Jeff Roberts (Tulane) led the Riders in sacks last season. He and Canadian tackle Rick Goltz are relatively sure of maintaining their jobs. The linebacking corps was Saskatchewan's strength a year ago, with Eddie Lowe (Alabama) and Billy Jackson (Mississippi State) on the outside and Canadian Jerry Friesen in the middle.

Gotta admits he'd prefer to have one man handle both the punting and place-kicking but as he went into camp he didn't have any one of that stature. So Dave Ridgway will be the place-kicker and Paul Hickie the punter.

Western Division

TORONTO ARGONAUTS

(9-6-1) It was scarcely time enough for Argonaut fans to roll it around on their tongues and really savor the sweet, succulent taste of victory—a treat that had taken 31 years to reach their palates. Less than 12 months after winning their first Grey Cup in 31 years, the Argos were served a plate of sour reality when they were upset last fall in the Eastern Division final by the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. Mind you, some astute observers could see it coming. The Argos' vaunted run-and-shoot offense fired too many blanks during the season and caused the Scullers to lose games they should have won easily.

Still, the shock of being denied a return trip to the Grey Cup game was a hard pill for many of the Argos to swallow. One, in particular, was veteran quarterback Joe Barnes (Texas Tech), who aimed a verbal salvo at head coach Bob O'Brien—claiming O'Brien stifled individualism and wanted to make the team a platoon of robots—before returning home to Texas. Barnes, who was in fact upset at not being named the starter over Condredge Holloway (Tennessee), had played out his option during the '84 season, and that outburst only served to confirm that he wouldn't be back in '85.

The departure of Barnes, who had come off the bench to lead the Argos to the '83 Grey Cup victory, creates the biggest concern for O'Brien as the '85 season approaches. The heir apparent to the No. 2 job is second-year pivot Ricky Turner (Washington State). Although bright, articulate and athletic, Turner has not thrown a pass in pro combat, having spent the entire '84 season holding a clipboard on the sidelines while Holloway or Barnes ran the show on the field. The ideal scenario would be for O'Brien to spot Turner carefully this season, relieving Holloway in situations where the outcome was a bit settled one way or another. But for that to occur, Holloway has to remain healthy. That might not be easy, for opposing defenses will once again declare open season on him. As insurance, the Argos have signed Mark Casale (Montclair College), a ninth-round pick of the Chicago Bears in '84, and will take another look at Romie Mayfield (Wichita State), who showed some ability at last year's camp.

Offensively, there aren't likely to be many other changes at all. O'Brien has promised that Canadian running back String Hinds, a member of Canada's bronze-medal-winning 4 x 100 relay team at the Los Angeles Olympics, will get every opportunity to step into a starting job. However, incumbent Lester Brown (Clemson) did an excellent job after coming over from Montreal at the start of the season and he'll be tough to displace. Bob Bronk, recovering from a knee injury that forced him to miss the Grey Cup party in '83, wasn't as productive last year and an improved year in '85 is expected from the big fullback. Terry Greer (Alabama State), gained a record 2,003 yards in 1983 but plagued by injuries, he got off to a slow start last season and had to come on strongly in the second half to finish with 1,100 yards. He'll be looking for a big year as he plays out his option and looks ahead to the NFL in 1986.

Slotback Emanuel Tolbert (Southern Methodist) who was also injury-plagued last year is going into his option year as well, and while the NFL might not be an alternative for him, he'll be playing for a substantially improved contract with the Argos. Steve Cox (Utah), who proved to be an excellent receiver after being obtained from Saskatchewan to fill in for Tolbert, should benefit from a training camp with the Argos.

Defensively, the big task—a 6-foot-4, 265-pound task—will be filling the tackle position made vacant by the departure of Earl "Bubba" Wilson (Kentucky) to the NFL. Franklin King (Kansas), who missed most of the year with a knee injury, should step into Wilson's spot alongside James Curry (Nevada Las Vegas), who had an outstanding season

(22 sacks) after taking over from King Veteran end David Boone (Eastern Michigan), who joined the Argos after being cut by Edmonton has retired. But Toronto got a ready replacement in Walter Ballard (Texas-El Paso), who is not only talented but 10 years younger, in the trade that sent Barnes's rights to Calgary.

O'Brien would like to return to the successful linebacking unit which he had in 1983 with Darrell Nicholson (North Carolina) in the middle flanked by William Mitchell (Long Beach State) and Canadian Don Moen (UBC). But that will depend on Nicholson's knee, which he tore up early last season. If that knee has not responded to an offseason of hard work, then Mitchell, who was the team's nominee as the outstanding defensive player in the East, will remain in the center and Tim Bryant (Southern Mississippi) will get a shot at an outside job.

The major change in the secondary will be Canadian Jan Carinci (Maryland), who will make a permanent switch from slotback to rover. He was tried there last year after Paul Bennett was dealt away. Darrell Wilson (Connecticut) also played out his option, but he could be back. However, he had lost his safety job to Ralph Dixon (Arizona State) at the end of last season and could have trouble winning it back. A pair of Western Kentucky products, Carl Brazley and Lamont Meacham, will be the corners and Dennis Clay (Oregon) the other safety.

Hank Ilesic, with all his legal entanglements out of the way, will be able to concentrate on the punting and place-kicking.

MONTEAL CONCORDS

(6-9-1) General manager and head coach Joe Galat believes he has a genuine reason for optimism as the Concordes approach their fourth season as the reincarnation of the Alouettes.

"This will be the first time we'll go into the season without having to play a rookie," said Galat. "I'd be surprised to see a rookie make our starting lineup. It's tough when the first Canadian Football League game an American kid sees is the one he's playing in."

The Concordes made the playoffs for the first time in their short existence last season with eight rookies in the lineup. And although they were swamped, 17-11, by the Tiger-Cats in the semifinal game played under monsoon conditions in Hamilton's Ivor Wynne Stadium, the experience gained by the likes of young quarterbacks Turner Gill (Nebraska) and Steve Smith (Michigan), defensive end Steve Raquet (Holy Cross), and running back Dwaine Wilson (Utah State), the CFL's rookie of the year, should be invaluable.

"Our defense was our strong point last year," offered Galat. "With a little maturity, especially at quarterback, we should improve offensively. It's obvious we have to do better at quarterback."

Gill, who arrived in Montreal with considerable fanfare, got the bulk of the work at quarterback, but his lack of experience was noticeable when he faced heat from the defense. He had the second-worst pass completion average (53.1 percent) in the Eastern Division and had 16 of his 375 throws picked off. Smith played sparingly, throwing 45 passes all season as veteran Canadian Gerry Datilio (Northern Colorado) supplied most of the relief work when Gill got into trouble. But Galat indicated that Smith, who saw occasional work as a receiver, would concentrate on quarterbacking this season and see appreciably more playing time behind Gill.

While speculating that a rookie won't crack the lineup this season, Galat might, in fact, find himself with a freshman if he elects to go with a second import running back. Wilson, who was second only to Schenley Award winner Willard Reaves of Winnipeg in the rushing department, with 1,083 yards on 226 carries, has the tailback job well in hand, but his partner could be a newcomer. Canadian Denis Ferdinand handled the fullback duties last season. One candidate is Rich Thomaselli (West Virginia Wesleyan), who spent part of last season with Green Bay after playing for the Houston Oilers when Galat was an assistant under Bum Phillips. But at 27 years of age and with three NFL seasons behind him, he is a rookie only in terms of CFL experience.

Galat has recruited several swift receivers, including Keith Nelson (Southwest Mississippi State), Javaro Sims (Florida A&M), and Mario Johnson (Houston), but they'll have their work cut out for them in trying to oust incumbents Todd Brown (Nebraska), Jeff Patterson (Youngstown State), and Harold Bailey (Oklahoma State). Nick Arakgi named the outstanding Canadian in the league last season, is a fixture at tight end.

The offensive line returns intact and could be further strengthened if Ian Sinclair (Miami), whom the Concordes drafted last year and who was not selected in this year's NFL draft, decides his future lies in Montreal.

The Montreal defense was the league's fourth stingiest last season despite the facts that they spent a lot of time on the field and that Galat was inserting new parts into the unit throughout the year. The prize acquisition was Raquet, the prototype CFL player—too small for the NFL, but quick and tough—who provided the Concordes with a potent pass rusher along the lines of B.C.'s James Parker and Toronto's Vince Goldsmith. He missed several games with a knee injury but he registered 15 sacks and is the pivot of Galat's defense.

Other fine midseason additions were middle linebacker Paul Gray (Western Kentucky), outside linebacker John Pointer (Vanderbilt), who returned after an unsuccessful attempt to gain an NFL job, and defensive linemen Sandy Armstrong (Colorado) and Paul Martin (South Carolina). Martin, Armstrong, Canadian Doug Scott (Boise State), and Raquet will form the defensive front four, with homebrew Ken Ciancone working alongside Gray and Pointer as the linebackers.

Cornerback Harry Skipper (South Carolina) established himself as an all-star in his very first year in the CFL and followed that up with another outstanding performance in 1984. He heads a secondary that is a fine combination of youth and experience. Cornerback Andre Francis (New Mexico State) is heading into his third season, as is safety Aaron Hill (Lamar), while the other safety, Vince Phason (Arizona), is starting his tenth. Rover Phil Jones has five seasons behind him. Backup Preston Young has seven years' experience.

There is an indication that the Concordes will finally make a change in their kicking game, with Gerald McGrath and Roy Kurtz vying for the job of 13-year veteran Don Sweet. Mike McTague, obtained from Calgary, will likely be the punter.

OTTAWA RIDERS' MOTIVATION

(4-12-0) Reggie Jackson isn't the only Mr. October in professional sports. The Canadian Football League had its own Mr. Autumn in George Brancato, the long-time head coach of the Ottawa Rough Riders. He made a habit of starting the run for the roses from the top of the homestretch after trailing the field for much of the early going. But just as October has turned to November for Jackson, so the calendar of late-season miracles ran out on Brancato last fall when the injury-riddled Riders finished last in the Eastern Division. Not soon afterwards, Brancato, whose Rider teams had never missed the playoffs in his 11 seasons as head coach, was bumped aside ways into the role of director of player personnel, a job he quit after just two months.

To replace Brancato, the Riders went for one of his former assistants, Joe Moss. But they had to reach into the ranks of the Toronto the run-and-shoot this season. To further school himself in the pass-oriented attack, he spent time at the training camp of the Denver Gold of the United States Football League, whose head coach, Mose Davis, first brought the run-and-shoot to the CFL as the Argos' offensive coordinator in 1982.

The new offense should suit the bereaved Rider quarterback J.C. Watts (Oklahoma), who has suffered a series of performance-hampering injuries since joining Ottawa and has not exactly lived up to his "savior" billing. This year, Watts arrived back in Ottawa in mid-March and spent two sessions a day with quarterback-receiver coach Kevin Gilbride. He watched yards of film on the run-and-shoot and then attempted to relate what he saw to the formations and alignments the Ottawa coaches had drawn up for this season's playbook.

"I've seen the Houston Gamblers use the run-and-shoot offense, and everything looked easy," Watts said. "But there's a lot more concealed in it than I ever thought." He also found that he'll need receivers who can not only run and catch, but who are smart enough to learn the intricacies of the new offense. The secret of the Argos' success was that the likes of Paul Pearson, Terry Greer, Cedric Minter (now with the New York Jets) and Emanuel Tolbert were able to carry out their duties to perfection.

The Riders improved their backup to Watts by obtaining Bernard Quarles (Hawaii) from Calgary. Also vying for duty are Nathaniel Koonce (Florida A&M), Art Williams (Southern Illinois), Ike Jackson (Oklahoma State), and Prince McJunkins (Wichita State).

The Riders' pass-catching corps will likely undergo considerable change. Keith Baker, who came over from Hamilton, went looking for work in the NFL and found it in San Francisco. Dwight Edwards moved back west in a swap with Calgary, and veteran Canadian Bruce Walker was traded to Montreal, after missing much of the last two seasons with injuries. Waymon Alridge (Nevada-Las Vegas) and Canan Pat Stogqua, two holdovers from last season, re-signed with Ottawa and should retain jobs, but setback David Newman (Missouri) could be in trouble despite having an excellent '84 season. One reason he was released by the Argos was that he couldn't adapt to the run-and-shoot. Now he'll be asked to try to adapt once more.

Another veteran in trouble is all-star guard Rudy Phillips (North Texas State), a two-time Schenley winner as the league's top offensive lineman. Moss has decided that the Riders can't afford to be the only team in the league with an import offensive lineman, unless Phillips can make the transition to defense, he may be job hunting in the U.S. The Riders already have a replacement for Phillips in Nick Benjamin, out of Montreal's Concord University, who was the No. 1 pick in this year's college draft.

There'll be other changes. Running back Arvin "Skip" Walker (Texas A&M) was the East's leading rusher in '82 and '83 but was sidelined for much of last season. By the time he returned, he'd lost his job to Tim McCray (Tulane), who finished sixth in the rushing derby. He'll have an equally tough time getting it back this year.

Defensively, ends Greg Marshall (Oregon State), a perennial all-star, and Jack Williams (Bowling Green) were solid performers as were linebackers Al Washington (Ohio State) and Rick Soweta. But in the secondary only Ricky Barden (North Carolina) is assured of a job this season.

Ken Clark will punt and Dean Dorsey will handle the placements, unless Dorsey shows he can handle both chores.

The run-and-shoot transformed the Argos from chumps to champs over one season. Rider fans are hoping the same magic takes place in the capital.

Ottawa

Argonauts to acquire his services. He had been the Argos' defensive line coach for the past two seasons. Moss, whose style is a quiet but no-nonsense approach appropriate for someone holding the rank of colonel in the U.S. Air Force, will offer a marked contrast to Brancato's quiet but easygoing ways. There will definitely be more discipline around the Rough Rider shop this summer.

During his tenure in Toronto, Moss became an advocate of the run-and-shoot offense that has carried the Argos to three straight first place finishes in the Eastern Division. One of his first pronouncements after gaining the Ottawa job was that the Riders would be using

HAMILTON TIGER-CATS

(6-9-1) Perhaps the most incredible aspect of the 1984 CFL season was the appearance of the Tiger-Cats in the Grey Cup game, against Winnipeg. Of course, they were demolished by the Bombers, 47-17, but the mere fact that they were participants in the Big Game was an astonishing feat and, perhaps, said as much about the Argos' inconsistent nature as it did about the Ticats' superiority. This year, however, the Ticats will need more than a collapse by the Argos to make an encore appearance in the championship game. They'll need divine intervention.

The team is in tatters. From top to bottom the Ticats have gaping holes in their structure. And the prospects of plugging those openings aren't good. Once one of the cornerstones of the Eastern Division, the Ticats have fallen on hard times. They averaged just over 16,000 last season and owner Harold Ballard (yes, the same Ballard who has allowed the once proud Toronto Maple Leaf hockey club to fall into ruin) doesn't seem eager to invest in a miserable cause.

The Ticats' major loss was quarterback Dieter Brock to the Los Angeles Rams after the former Scheney Award winner, despite earning $300,000 a year in Hamilton, had played out his option. Mind you, that salary, though the highest in the CFL, paled by comparison to the four-year, $2.75-million pact he gained from the Rams. So the Ticats, in all fairness, had no chance of competing for his services. The frightening aspect of losing Brock was that as training camp approached there was no suitably experienced replacement. And even though head coach Al Bruno chastised the press as forecasters of doom and gloom, the fact remains that he faced the prospect of going into '85 with one of his two backups from last season: Pete Gaea (Iowa) or Jeff Tedford (Fresno State), as his starter.

Brock wasn't the only Ticat eager to flee Hamilton. Two assistant coaches quit: offensive backfield coach Elijah Pitts joined Buffalo Bills of the NFL and offensive line coach Jerry Brunner went home to West Virginia. As well, player personnel director Monte Charles resigned. Furthermore, Bruno has the difficult task of trying to replace defensive backs Felix Wright (Drake) and Gerald Bess (Tuskegee Institute) and receiver Ron Johnson (Long Beach State). There was also some concern that running back Johnny Shepherd (Livingston), whose original injury was diagnosed as a hip pointer but which turned out to be more serious, would not be ready for the start of camp.

The problems don't end there. All-purpose back Rufus Crawford (Virginia State), who was the Eastern nominee as the outstanding player in the CFL last season, was convicted of an assault charge following an offseason incident which he claimed was perpetuated by a racial slur. There was concern that if he received anything more than an unconditional discharge when he came up for sentencing in the spring, he could be denied a work permit. But the charges were dropped.

While losing Johnson, the Ticat receiving corps remains reasonably strong thanks to the presence of slotback Rocky DiPietro. One of the CFL's finest homebred pass catchers, DiPietro was third in the league in receiving last season, with 71 catches for 1,063 yards and five touchdowns. He'll be joined by holdovers Steve Stapler (San Diego State), Scott Corlie (Brigham Young), out for most of last year with a knee injury, DeWayne Jett (Hawaii), and a host of newcomers which includes Dave Vandegriff (Idaho State), John Green (Tulsa), and Charles Williams (Snow Junior College), the son of former Ticat great John Williams.

If Shepherd does recover in time to regain his running-back job, then Crawford, if he is allowed to remain in Canada, will be able to return to slotback as well as handle the kick-off and punt-return duties that he does so well. Veteran Canadian Mark Bragagnolo returns as the fullback.

The Ticats' offensive line was seen to be its weak link last year, but Brock's savvy and ability to get rid of the ball quickly saved the unit from too much embarrassment. The youngsters, however, will need more protection than this group can provide.

Defensively, the Ticats got good news when end Grover Covington (Johnson C. Smith) resigned with the club after becoming a free agent. He, along with Mitchell Price (Livingston), Rod Skillman (Missouri), and Mike Walker (Washington State) provide a strong front four. And in Ben Zambiasi (Georgia) entering his eighth season, and homebrews Leo Ezerins, John Priestner and Ed Galaveckas, the Ticats don't have a shabby linebacking crew either.

The same can't be said of the secondary following the loss of Wright and Bess. Mark Streeter (Arizona), who finally made it with Hamilton after failing to hang on in Toronto and Winnipeg, should start at one corner. Howard Fields (Baylor) is a solid safety and Canadian Paul Bennett, who was considered finished in Toronto, rebounded strongly in a Ticat uniform at the end of the year. But where there's any bounce left in him at age 31 remains to be seen. Newcomers seeking jobs in the secondary include Keith Brown (East Carolina) and Darryl Smith (Lamar), who had previous trials with Calgary and Toronto, and Edroy Yancey (Illinois State). Watch for the Ticats to pick up a lot of rejects from other clubs after the final cutdown date.

If there's one position where the Ticats are the envy of most other teams it's their kicking game, where Bernie Ruoff (Syracuse) begins his eleventh CFL season as one of its very best punter/place-kickers.

“The Boys Club helped me run my life.”

O.J. Simpson Enterprises

O.J. Simpson

“When I was growing up, I was the quickest kid on the block. But the streets were catching up with me. I’m sure glad there was a Boys Club around to help keep me a step ahead.

“You know, a Boys Club shows kids there are lots of ways to reach goals, besides scoring touchdowns. It gives them every chance to be leaders. And encourages something every bit as important as good leadership—good citizenship.

“They sure pointed me in the right direction, and I’ve been running my life ever since—running through lines, running through airports. Now I’m even running my own business!

“It’s no wonder so many Boys Club kids grow into productive, civic-minded adults, like teachers, politicians, business executives and professional athletes. Which gives more than 1,200,000 young people, at 1,100 Boys Club facilities across the country, something to look forward to.

“Hey, I’m not saying a Boys Club can turn every kid into a star. But a Boys Club sure can teach ’em how to reach for one.”

The Club that beats the streets.

FREE US MEDIA GUIDE WITH EVERY SUBSCRIPTION

The '85 Chargers will have a new look under new owner Alex Spanos who's determined to return the club to its winning ways of four consecutive playoff berths in 1979-82.

With a healthy Dan Fouts at the helm, Air Coryell's exciting attack will be back on track in '85, pacing the league in the tough AFC West!

Don't miss out on any of the exciting action! Each week during the season, 27 times a year, Chargers Football Weekly brings you the inside story of the pace-setting San Diego Chargers, the club that put the aerial attack on the map, pioneered the three wide receiver offense and redesigned the tight end position with standout Keenan Winslow.

In each issue we'll deliver comprehensive stats, complete weekly standings, scouting reports, key game matchups, previews of upcoming opponents and post game reports.

And you don't have to wait until the season starts. You can begin NOW by subscribing today!
